PENSION FUNDS SHUN BUYING MORE BONDS FROM NEW YORK CITY

A Key Element in Plan to Pay Off Notes Is Opposed by Adviser—Beame Seeks More Talks

By CHARLES KAISER

The chief consultant to New York City's employee pension funds said yesterday that he saw no possibility that the funds would buy more city bonds, a key element of the city's tentative plan to repay the holders of $1 billion in short-term notes.

"I for one do not see the possibility of additional commitments by the retirement systems" for the purchase of New York City or Municipal Assistance Corporation bonds, said Jack Bigel, the pension consultant.

The purchase of some kind of new bond issue by the city's banks and pension funds is a critical part of a proposed two-part solution to the problems posed by the State Court of Appeals decision that invalidated the city's year-old moratorium. A spokesman for the city's banks—which, together with the pension funds, have already bought $1.8 billion in M.A.C. bonds to help the city through its earlier fiscal difficulties — withheld comment yesterday on the newest city proposal.

Situation More Difficult

Mayor Beame immediately conceded yesterday that if Mr. Bigel's position did not change it would be impossible for the city to raise the $1 billion it needed to comply with the court decision on its own. But he added, "I don't think that Bigel closed the door and said we don't want to talk any more."

Despite the seemingly categorical nature of Mr. Bigel's remarks—and an endorsement of them by Victor Gotbaum, president of District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees—city and state officials generally took the view that officers of the city's pension funds might still change their minds.

Eugene Keilin, executive director of the M.A.C., said Mr. Bigel's remarks "remind us that the pension funds' participation is not automatic and that nobody should walk around assuming it."

"I think that Jack is very serious," Mr. Keilin added, "but this is not his last word on the subject."

Mr. Bigel originally made his views known in a morning gathering in the Mayor's office on a day in which there

BIG 3 STEELMAKERS JOIN IN PRICE RISES; CARTER 'CONCERNED'

WAGE-PRICE COUNCIL WORRIED

U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic Follow Other Producers — Alcoa Sets Increase

By GENE SMITH

The nation's three leading steelmakers —the United States Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Republic Steel Corporation—announced yesterday that they would go along with the 6 percent increases on sheet and strip steel announced last week by the six other leading producers.

The moves made it virtually certain that the increases would become effective, analysts said. Only stiff opposition by large customers or by the Government, in the form of so-called jawboning, could forestall the increases. Neither group seemed to be vigorously opposing the increases yesterday even though the market for steel has been relatively weak and prices have been widely discounted.

The Aluminum Company of America also said yesterday that it would increase prices by as much as 11.2 percent on sheet products used for beer, carbonated beverage and other containers. The increases will be effective Jan. 2, the company said, adding that they will be the first since December 1974. Page 55.

Carter Watching Situation

Meanwhile in Washington, officials at the Council on Wage and Price Stability expressed concern that the steel price rise could weaken the already faltering economic recovery.

There was no sign, however, that the council or the White House would take any direct action to bring about a rollback.

President-elect Jimmy Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell, said in a news conference in Americus, Ga. that Mr. Carter was "watching very closely" the price actions of the steel companies. Mr. Powell said Mr. Carter was "very concerned" about the inflationary effects of the increases in the United States and about the possible impact on decisions by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting countries.

Mr. Powell went on to say that Mr. Carter's transition team advisers in Washington had for the first time, in connection with the steel prices increase, been given access to Federal Government information on industry statistics.

The increase on sheet and strip, which accounted last year for 38.5 percent of the domestic industry's total shipments, is scheduled to take effect Wednesday, a move whose suddenness caused concern among steel users.

Speer's Statement Recalled

The decision of United States Steel to go along with its competitors was also cause for surprise among users, many of whom pointed out that exactly three weeks ago yesterday Edgar B. Speer, chairman of United States Steel, said at a regional stockholders' meeting in Boston that he did not foresee any steel price increases this year.

The increase was even more puzzling in light of the fact that steel production for the week ended last Saturday fell by 5.7 percent, its largest weekly decline of the year, to the low point for 1976 as only 2.09 million tons were poured. A

HIGH COURT TO HEAR CHALLENGE BY NIXON

He Contests Law Giving U.S. Control Over His Presidential Papers

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—The Supreme Court agreed today to hear former President Richard M. Nixon's challenge to the 1974 statute that gave the Government control over his Presidential papers and tape recordings.

Mr. Nixon lost the first round of his challenge last January, when a three-judge Federal court here unanimously upheld the statute as constitutional.

The lower court reasoned in part that Congress, in passing the law, had "an adequate basis for concluding that Mr. Nixon might not be a wholly reliable custodian of the materials."

The Court also moved today in two key areas, capital punishment and abortion, taking the following actions:

¶It agreed to decide whether a state may make the death penalty mandatory for the murder of a police officer, acting in a case involving a Louisiana law that the Court seemed to have struck down last July. [Page 33.]

¶It affirmed a lower court ruling that struck down an Indiana law requiring first-trimester abortions to be performed in a licensed health facility.

In the Nixon case, the Ford Adminis-

At the Maputo airport, a Soviet-built helicopter in camouflage paint is a reminder of the advanced equipment the Russians can still throw into the struggle.

Along the glass doors that line the airport concourse, signs call for total mobilization in support of the war. "Solidarity with the fraternal people of Zimbabwe!" they say, using the black nationalists' name for Rhodesia.

Cigar-Smoking Kissinger in Top Hat

A hand-lettered wall newspaper denounces United States peace efforts with a cartoon showing Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger as one of several cigar-smoking capitalists wearing top hats. The caption reads, "Kissinger and his friends singing their latest song—'Majority rule for the peoples of southern Africa.' "

An accompanying essay adds: "The winds of revolution tell Kissinger he must speak up for majority rule if all is not to be lost. But the peoples of southern Africa know very well which side he and his imperialist lackeys are on."

Criticism of the United States is matched by praise of the Soviet Union and its allies, particularly Cuba. As Soviet arms are being unloaded, a Cuban delega-

CARTER BID TO CURB APPOINTEES IS HINTED

Powell Tells of Move to Bar Later Employment With Businesses

By CHARLES MOHR

Special to The New York Times

AMERICUS, Ga., Nov. 29—Jimmy Carter's official spokesman hinted strongly today that the President-elect was close to a decision to ask Congress to pass laws that would prevent or discourage appointees in the Carter administration from later taking employment with business concerns that do "substantial business" with the Government agency the appointee served.

This was a new development and broadened Mr. Carter's previously expressed determination to end so-called "revolving door" movement of personnel from Federal regulatory agencies into the business regulated by them and vice versa. In both cases the intent is to broaden the "public interest" and to restrict possible conflict of interests.

Mr. Carter met this afternoon with a group of personal advisers to discuss the standards and requirements he will ask of people requested to serve in his administration.

His press secretary, Jody Powell, told a news conference later that "we believe we have reached a point very near resolution of most of the questions involved." He added that the points discussed today "would appear to be stricter than current laws" and past practices of incoming administrations.

Mr. Powell added, however, that he was not able to discuss the new code or suggested legislation until Joseph Moore, an Atlanta attorney who has been working on the problem for Mr. Carter, reports on the meeting to Congressional figures and others Mr. Moore had previously conn Catholic and other private universities, disparaged in the past as sectarian, reactionary citadels for wealthier students who failed to pass the entrance exams of more demanding public institutions, have surged ahead as state universities have declined.

Although lacking the size and financial resources to replace the state system, the private universities are drawing thousands of students and professors from the public institutions. In many cases, private institutions are surpassing the academic standards of rival state universities and have gained a reputation for political tolerance that no longer exists on many national university campuses.

The road downhill for the state university system in Latin America has been linked to the political activism of students and the ambitions of governments eager to expand higher education but unwilling to foot the mounting costs.

For generations, Latin American university students enjoyed a political influence out of all proportion to their numbers and unrivaled by their counterparts in Europe and the United States. They have traditionally been viewed as the political conscience of their nations, and at times have played key roles in the overthrow of unpopular authoritarian regimes.

In Venezuela, democratically elected presidents have emerged from a political base built during their days as student leaders.

In Chile, the university youth brigades for decades fed the ranks of political parties of the right, center and left. And

Jersey Legislator Guilty of Bribery On Liquor Supply

By WALTER H. WAGGONER

Special to The New York Times

NEWARK, Nov. 29—Matthew Feldman, president of the New Jersey State Senate, pleaded guilty today to charges that he had paid $6,400 in bribes to assure that his liquor distribution company would be the exclusive supplier to the Emersons Ltd. restaurant chain in New Jersey.

Mr. Feldman, a 57-year-old Democrat from Teaneck, acknowledged in a tense hearing before Judge Frederick B. Lacey in Federal District Court that he had violated the law by agreeing to pay a representative of Emersons 2.5 percent of the $240,000 business that would be acquired by Federal Wines and Liquor Company of Kearny, which is owned by Mr. Feldman's family. The Senator's 27-year-old son, Daniel, a sales representative for the company, also pleaded guilty.

Judge Lacey set Dec. 8 for sentencing. He could impose a fine totaling $6,000, or $1,000 for each of the six counts of the indictment. Commercial bribery is classified as a misdemeanor and does not carry a prison sentence.

The offense is described as the use of illegal payments to a business or corpora-

Godfrey Cambridge, 43, Dies on Set For Entebbe Movie in Hollywood

By United Press International

HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 29—Godfrey Cambridge, the actor and comedian, died today of a heart attack on a movie set at Universal Studios. He was 43 years old.

Mr. Cambridge was stricken during the filming of "Victory at Entebbe," a television film about the Israeli rescue of hostages from hijackers in Uganda. Mr. Cambridge was playing Uganda's President, Idi Amin.

Theodore Bikel, folk singer and actor, playing in the scene, said Mr. Cambridge suddenly collapsed on the set at the Burbank studios. Paramedics worked on him for 50 minutes, giving him oxygen and shock treatment, but Mr. Cambridge did not respond to the treatment.

His death was announced by St. Joseph's Medical Center.

Mr. Cambridge, who mixed both comedy and serious roles during his stage and screen career, had arrived only yesterday from his home in Ridgefield, Conn.

A compulsive eater who once weighed 300 pounds, the comedian-actor entered a hospital in April 1972, after completing the movie "Come Back Charleston Blue" when he suffered from exhaustion.

South Korean Shift Of Intelligence Unit In U.S. Is Reported

By RICHARD HALLORAN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—The South Korean Central Intelligence Agency has recalled its station chief and other officers here and reorganized its American apparatus under the command of President Park Chung Hee's son-in-law, according to a Korean with access to Seoul's decisions.

The Korean source said that the withdrawal was intended to cut off sources of information for a United States investigation into alleged Korean bribery of members of Congress, illegal lobbying and intimidation of Koreans living in this country.

The Korean, who asked not to be identified for fear of retribution, also indicated that the K.C.I.A. apparatus had been compromised by exposure in American newspapers. With this publicity, much of the apparatus appears to have been put out of action, at least temporarily.

The station chief ordered to return home soon is Maj. Gen. Kim Yung Hwan of the Korean Air Force. He is listed in the diplomatic register as a minister in the Korean Embassy here.

Southern Lebanon: Gunfire, Open Fences, Busy Markets

By HENRY TANNER

BINT JBAIL, Lebanon, Nov. 29—Left-wing Moslem and right-wing Christian militiamen traded fire from automatic weapons early today on Lebanon's last active military front near this Moslem town north of the Israeli border.

A few miles away, just south of the Christian garrison town of Qlaiaa, the gate in Israel's electrified border fence was open and the drivers of a dozen cars were waiting for their Lebanese passengers, who had crossed into Israel to get medical treatment at a field clinic there.

But just north of the gate Lebanese Christian soldiers blocked the road to Qlaiaa to visitors, explaining that the situation there was "tense." Except for two sentries out in the cold rain, the soldiers were huddling around a red-hot charcoal brazier in a shelter.

In Tyre and Saida, the two port cities of southern Lebanon, the narrow streets of the old markets were crowded as they had not been since last spring. The merchandise ranged from cabbages to worsted wool for suits and gold jewelry, and the war seemed to be far removed from the minds of the bustling shoppers.

Ships Are Unloaded

Ships were unloading cattle, wheat and cement.

At Zahrani, the big oil refinery just south of Saida, a small gas flame was flickering atop a slender stack that had been inactive for months. The refinery is gearing up for operation some 10 days from now when oil will start flowing again from Saudi Arabia through the Trans-Arabian Pipeline. Instructions to start pumping were given by King Khalid on Saturday.

Thus, uneasily, southern Lebanon is waiting for a decision whether Arab peace-keeping forces will move into the region bordering Israel.

Israel declared last week that it would hold Syria responsible for any attacks across the border by Palestinian guerrillas, but at the same time it has warned that it does not want any Syrian troops on its border.

The Palestinians, who have lost many of their positions near Beirut, are regrouping in the south and want to go close to the border. The right-wing Christians have occupied a strip of land along the border in military cooperation with Israel and their local commanders are resisting pressure from Syria and their national leaders in Beirut asking them to end the Israeli connection.

U.S. Helps Seek Solution

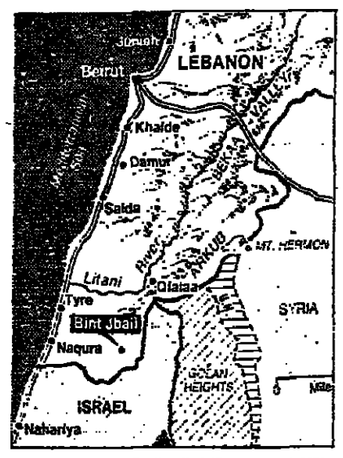
The United States has been using its good offices in Israel and Syria in an attempt to bring about a solution that will satisfy both the Israelis and the Arabs.

In Beirut last night Lebanese politicians reported that President Elias Sarkis had suggested that troops from Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates be sent into the southern border region, but not Syrians.

Syrian troops, contrary to earlier predictions, have not moved southward. Their southernmost roadblock on the coastal highway today was outside the Zahrani refinery south of Saida.

Palestinians as well as men of the Lebanese Arab Army, the pro-Moslem branch of Lebanon's disintegrated army, held positions outside Bint Jbail. But their number appeared to be small.

In Bint Jbail, the mayor, an elderly man wearing the traditional Arab headgear, said firmly, "The Arab forces must come—soon." He was interviewed at the town's only filling station. During the hour that the visitors spent there no car stopped to tank up. The town seemed empty and depressed in the cold, pouring rain.



The New York Times/Nov. 30, 1976

On an earlier visit, the streets had been teeming. But on Oct. 21, a Thursday, the day of the weekly market, the market place where the filling station is was shelled. Fourteen persons were killed. Some of the wounded have since died. Several thousand people have since left.

Rabin Says Israelis Will Stay

TEL AVIV, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said today that Israeli troops would stay along the Lebanese border "as long as they are needed," and his Foreign Minister proposed that Israel and Lebanon reach an agreement to keep the peace on both sides of the frontier.

"We are interested in—and therefore propose to reach as soon as possible—a reciprocal agreement with the accredited Government of Lebanon regarding arrangements that will insure calm on both sides of the border," Foreign Minister Yigal Allon said.

"Lebanon, with its own forces, should secure the border region on its side and the Israel army will secure the border region on our side," he said.

Although tension has slackened along the 90-mile border in the past few days, Mr. Rabin made it clear today that there were no plans to pull back infantry and armor rushed there a week ago to deter Syrian troops or Arab guerrillas from entering southern Lebanon in strength.

Asked how long the reinforcements would remain in the north, Mr. Rabin replied: "For as long as they are needed there."

Defense Minister Shimon Peres told the Cabinet last night that it appeared that southern Lebanese villagers were in control of the situation and a few hundred former Lebanese soldiers were also in the area.

A Cabinet announcement said that any attempt by the Palestine Liberation Organization to turn southern Lebanon into "a strip of terror would encounter firm Israeli opposition."

Libya Withdrawing Forces

TRIPOLI, Libya, Nov. 29 (AP)—Libya announced today that it was withdrawing the contingent of troops it had sent to Lebanon on the ground that the mission of Arab forces had changed from "peace-keeping to deterring."

A Foreign Ministry statement said the Arab League and President Elias Sarkis had been officially notified of this decision. The number of Libyan troops involved was not disclosed. In Cairo, it was reported that a Libyan note relayed to Secretary General Mahmoud Riad of the Arab League said the Libyan move was taken because of a recent decision by Arab heads of state to change the role of the Arab peace-keeping force from a symbolic to a deterrent one.

UNESCO Debate Over the Press Put Off 2 Years

NAIROBI, Kenya, Nov. 29 (UPI)—The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization agreed without voting today to put aside for at least two years a resolution on the dissemination of news, averting a floor fight between the document's Soviet backers and United States opponents.

Robert Kamm, the United States delegation's deputy leader, said that he expected the delay—in the form of a substitute resolution calling on the organization's director general, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, to consult with news experts during the next two years—would produce a much more realistic resolution on the question, which Washington could accept.

A Soviet spokesman, however, "deplored" the deferral of the resolution to the next general conference in 1978.

The resolution was one of the most important issues before the five-week meeting, which ends tomorrow.

The United States, West European and Nordic countries all charged that the original resolution on news operations would lead to government control of the press, especially a passage that said: "States are responsible for the activities in the international sphere of all mass media under their jurisdiction."

Moscow Denies Charge

A Soviet spokesman earlier denied that this was the intent and said that Moscow was willing to change or even delete the offending passage. He accused the United States, France and Japan of refusing to negotiate seriously on the issue.

But the conference instructed the director general to consult experts and present a substitute resolution to member countries by late next year or 1978 for discussion or action by the next general conference.

John Reinhard, the chief United States delegate, said that the compromise resolution was "a positive step forward."

"It is important to the success of any future work in this area to remain aware that the nature of the relationship between the government and the mass media in a particular country is a fundamental element of the political and social system of that country," Mr. Reinhard said.

"Those who aspire to suggest international guidelines in this area, therefore, must act with care, first to identify principles and ideas common to the many different political systems, and second to recommend future actions or policies only on the basis of very broad consensus among all the states concerned."

Relief Official in Turkey Is Said to Have Lost Job For Criticizing Quake Aid

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

ANKARA, Turkey, Nov. 29—The mayor of a village at the heart of Turkey's earthquake disaster zone who was dismissed from a relief coordinating committee was removed because of his criticism of Government relief efforts, Turkish journalists said here today.

Mayor Suleyman Celik of Muradiye, near Lake Van in eastern Turkey, declared at a press conference there after his dismissal yesterday: "We do not have enough aid, and the aid we have is not distributed properly."

Commerce Secretary Elliot L. Richardson of the United States said here today that Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel had assured him during an hour-long meeting in the Turkish capital that sufficient emergency relief supplies were now on hand in the disaster area. Almost 4,000 people are officially reported to have been killed by the quake last Wednesday.

Richardson Leaves for Rabat

Mr. Richardson ended a two-day visit to Turkey today without having visited the earthquake area and without announcing any further American emergency aid measures. The Secretary interrupted a previously scheduled tour of foreign capitals yesterday to fly here from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, to underscore Washington's concern about the disaster, which also left thousands injured. He departed today for Rabat, Morocco, after meeting with reporters.

The Demirel Government today sent 55 housing experts on unspecified missions in the earthquake area, where more than 5,000 buildings are officially reported to have been destroyed and more than 3,500 rendered uninhabitable by the quake and a series of tremors that followed.

Mayor Celik, who was elected to his office, was removed from a committee that also included the Governor of Van, Ahmet Tosun, who was appointed to the governorship by Ankara, the journalists said.

European Leaders Awaiting Carter Administration

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

THE HAGUE, Nov. 29—The European Common Market leaders held their year-end conference here today and told one another, in effect, that they could do little except mark time until they learn the intentions of the new United States Administration and of the oil-producing countries.

As usual, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany spoke most bluntly in explaining why Europe could now keep only one eye on Washington and one eye on the oil countries.

Briefing the press himself after the opening session this afternoon, Mr. Schmidt said: "There is no U.S. policy. We have to wait and we cannot take any decisions yet. It is all the more reason for both the industrial and the developing countries not to upset the difficult situation."

Other heads of government made more or less open appeals to the oil producers not to raise prices in the meantime. But Mr. Schmidt took the firm line that it simply was not a question of whether or not one side made concessions to induce cooperation from the other. The very ability of the industrial countries to transfer resources to the developing lands depends on the price of oil and its impact on their economies, he declared.

German Proposal Was Expected

The Germans had told their partners at a recent meeting of Common Market foreign ministers that they would come up with a proposal on the north-south issue of all raw material prices. The expectation was that a German concession to third-world demands would enable the nine market nations to take a joint conciliatory attitude toward developing countries, which in turn might influence oil producers to hold off on a price increase.

The oil countries, which are scheduled to meet in Qatar next month, have linked the petroleum price issue to the whole question of the transfer of wealth from north to south.

They set no precise equation, but they hinted that they could look at the relationship between rising prices for industrial goods and oil prices a little more favorably if the industrial countries promised important concessions to developing countries, specifically on the long-term raw materials issue and on debt relief.

It still is not quite clear whether the Qatar meeting will be held as scheduled. The initial date, Dec. 15, was put in question because that was the day that foreign ministers of countries participating in the long-stagnant north-south conference were to meet in Paris, and there was a suggestion that the oil producers would wait a little to see what happened there.

Paris Meeting to Be Deferred

Today it was made clear that the Paris meeting would be postponed until late February or early March, although none of the European leaders here wanted to say who had requested the delay. The announcement, Chancellor Schmidt said, will be made by the two co-chairmen, from Venezuela and Canada, when they meet in New York on Wednesday. The reason, he said, is to give time for the Carter Administration to work out its policy and hold consultations with its partners.

President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing urged the Europeans to follow the French example of setting a money ceiling on their oil imports next year, so that if prices went up, imports would have to go down and expenditures would not grow. He also urged the United States to go ahead with its almost forgotten project of making itself independent of oil imports.

The French reason that the United States, by buying more and more Arab oil instead of relying on its own resources, is contributing toward driving the price up. This is a reversal of the French view of two years ago, when Paris opposed a floor price that would have encouraged American domestic production and it apparently reflects growing French interest in North Sea oil and other energy sources, which would be endangered by an abrupt Arab decision to switch tactics and reduce the price of oil sharply.

The Italian Prime Minister, Giulio Andreotti, making an appeal that one official privately called a "pathetic" plea from his hard-pressed country, suggested another roundtable meeting of oil producers, "more or less industrialized countries" and the poorest countries, to ask for a six-monh moratorium on oil price increases.

There was general agreement among the leaders that the anticipated European recovery would slow down next year, though there was some difference over whether to go by the more optimistic predictions of Common Market experts or the more pessimistic ones of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development.

East Germany Tightening Curbs, But Dissidents Say They'll Fight On

By ELLEN LENTZ
Special to The New York Times

EAST BERLIN, Nov. 29—East German authorities have taken new repressive steps against intellectuals critical of them and a leading Communist has warned: "There can be freedom for counterrevolutionary enemies of the people."

A prominent Socialist critic of the Government, Prof. Ernest Havemann, a physicist, has been under house arrest since Friday at his home in Grünheide, outside East Berlin. A writer and two musicians were arrested over the weekend and at least 10 of East Germany's best-known authors were publicly chastised by the Communist Party.

The warning, by Alexander Abusch, a former Minister of Cultural Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister, was published in the magazine Sonntag. It marked the first time that a prominent Communist had used the term "counterrevolution" in connection with the restiveness that has gripped the nation in recent weeks.

Reflecting Official Concern

The warning was viewed as a clear indication of the seriousness with which East Germany's rulers view the spirit of opposition that has flared among intellectuals since the exiling two weeks ago of Wolf Biermann. He is a 40-year-old dissident singer and poet who, while on a concert tour in West Germany, was stripped of his East German citizenship. It was announced that he was barred from returning.

Before the action against Mr. Biermann, there had been a flood of applications by East Germans from all walks of life, asking for permits to move to the West. They either sought to join family members or to pursue such rights of freedom as were enunciated at Helsinki at the close of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in July 1975.

The dissident intellectuals, however, are in a different position. Instead of seeking to leave their country, they are aiming to make the East German socialist system work in a more democratic manner.

Dissidents' Fears and Resolve

One writer, who asked that his name not be used, said that while dissidents were afraid of possible reprisals they were also determined to carry on their campaign.

Prominent authors who are involved said that any charges that they were engaged in a conspiracy, as implied in the warning by Mr. Abusch, were absolutely without foundation. "What it all amounts to," one writer told a Western friend, "is the simple question of whether there can be freedom of expression under socialism."

After Mr. Biermann was exiled, 12 leading authors, among them the novelists Christa Wolf and Stefan Heym, and the poets Stefan Hermlin and Günter Kunert, sent a petition to the Government asking that Mr. Biermann's expulsion be reconsidered and that the Communist leaders show "the strength the German Democratic Republic has in tolerating differences."

More Join in Campaign

This request was rejected and the authors' statement was denounced as an instrument "serving the anti-Communist instigations of our opponents." Since then, scores of other intellectuals and artists, including several popular actors and actresses and Frank Baier, a leading film director, have joined the protest.

Mrs. Wolf, along with her husband, the author Gerhard Wolf, Mr. Hermlin, Mr. Kunert and six other persons were publicly criticized and reprimanded over the weekend, according to Neues Deutschland, the Communist Party newspaper. There were warnings of repressions against other signers.

Professor Havemann is an anti-Nazi who spent years at hard labor during the Hitler era in the Brandenburg penitentiary with other political prisoners including Erich Honecker, the East German Communist leader. The professor, long an outspoken critic of the Government, was expelled from the Communist Party 12 years ago for demanding a return to true socialism and an end to "Stalinist" practices..

A Protest on TV in West

The physicist, who protested against Mr. Biermann's expulsion on West German television, told a visitor Friday that he had been served with official orders putting him under house arrest. Since then no stranger has been allowed on the street where the professor lives.

Mr. Honecker is believed, for old times' sake, to have saved the dissident from being imprisoned. Those arrested, all friends of Mr. Biermann's, were identified as Jürgen Fuchs, a writer, and two pop musicians, Gerulf Pannach and Christian Kunert.

Friends of Mrs. Wolf, who has been one of the prime targets of attack, reported that she had had a heart seizure as a result of the pressure that was brought against the dissidents. Another author reportedly suffered a circulatory collapse.

U.N. Aide Warns of Starvation Peril to Million Uprooted Angolans

LUANDA, Angola, Nov. 29 (UPI)—A million people, one out of six Angolans, are estimated to have been uprooted by the country's civil war and many are running short of food.

"In some areas people are in danger of starving," said Jaime Balcázar Aranibar of Bolivia, the United Nations' chief representative here. Widespread malnutrition has led to the spread of endemic illnesses such as tuberculosis, intestinal infection and tetanus. The country has 500 doctors, one for every 12,000 people.

Common Market Sent In Food

In the face of this, the United Nations, other international organizations and various governments have joined in a relief porgram for Angola. The United Nations effort totals $80 million and includes $32.5 million in cash and 48,000 tons of food.

Most of the direct government aid is from Communist and Scandinavian countries. But the European Common Market has given $7 million in food, including 1,200 tons of milk powder that was unloaded two weeks ago in Luanda, the capital.

"Early this year the situation was dramatic, tragic," Mr. Balcázar said in an interview, adding, "I think we have reached bottom and things should pick up now." He said the million people uprooted by the war included many refugees who had fled into neighboring Zaire and South-West Africa displaced persons in Angola and those who lost their jobs as a result of the war.

There are no camps, but about 100,000 refugees are crowded in Luanda, a city of 500,000 population, he said.

"Malnutrition is very prevalent, especially in the north," Mr. Balcázar said. "The people ate their seeds, so now they have none to plant. In some places, the workers did not harvest the crops after the Portuguese owners fled, and the coffee crop especially is hard hit. It's down to 20 percent of normal."

Manioc is a staple of the Angolan diet, severely limited the area under cultivation and the plant takes 18 months to reach maturity. Other vegetable crops do not provide the necessary calories and protein, according to United Nations officials.

Doctors Are Thinly Spread

Mr. Balcázar said there were 500 doctors in Angola when the country became independent a year ago this month, and that 460 fled the country over two months. However, Cuba and Algeria sent in doctors to bring the number back to 500.

"But the situation is still very bad," the United Nations representative said. "They are spread out in the country, whereas in colonial times the doctors were concentrated in the cities."

Mr. Balcázar said the United Nations was planning a $2 million vocational program to train electricians, mechanics and telecommunications experts. He said the Angolan Government was seeking international help for an intensive training program for teachers in secondary schools, to replace Portuguese teachers who fled.

"The demand for everything is like an avalanche," he said. "People are discovering such thing as aspirin, for example, which they never knew existed. The demand for pharmaceuticals has gone up 10,000 percent. And there are none."

Yugoslavia has sent 300 buses to replace the Luanda city buses taken by the Portuguese after independence on Nov. 11, 1975. Until the Yugoslav buses arrived, many people had to walk many miles to their jobs.

Brazil is sending more buses, and Sweden has sold the Government 100 trucks. Sweden is planning a $7 million relief assistance program for Angola in medicine, education, transportation and bridge-building.

Mozambican Government Is Preparing Its People for a Wider Guerrilla War in Rhodesia

...ion tours Mozambique, getting front-page coverage in the press.

In South Africa, intelligence sources insist that direct Cuban involvement in the conflict is an approaching reality. The sources point to reports of Cuban military advisers and Soviet T-54 tanks being airlifted from Angola, where a Cuban military force turned the tide of the civil war in favor of the Marxist faction that now governs from Luanda, the capital.

"We certainly can't rule the Cubans out of it," said a West European diplomat who has discussed the Rhodesian issue with President Samora Machel of Mozambique.

The Mozambican leader is assumed to be the moving force behind a declaration made three weeks ago by five African presidents in Dar es Salaam, the Tanzanian capital. The statement spoke of war as the only means by which black rule in Rhodesia could be insured. The British-American peace effort was dismissed, and friendly nations, primarily the Communists, were asked to step up military support.

For President Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia, who has pushed for a negotiated settlement, the statement amounted to a concession to the less conciliatory stand favored by Mr. Machel and by President Agostinho Neto of Angola. Within days, Tanzanian soldiers were reported to be moving into Mozambique. Soviet ships were said to begin unloading armored cars and rocket launchers.

Members of the Rhodesian guerrillas left Geneva and returned to Mozambique. Among them was Josiah Tongogara, regarded by some as more influential with the guerrillas and with Mr. Machel than Robert Mugabe, their representative in Geneva.

At the President's palace, which overlooks the harbor, Mr. Machel has made no secret of his preference for a black government in Rhodesia similar to his own, completing a Marxist band cutting across southern Africa, and isolating South Africa.

Nonetheless, Mr. Machel has some persuasive reasons for favoring an early end to the conflict. A United Nations report estimates that his decision last March to close the border with Rhodesia has cost Mozambique more than $110 million in rail-transit and port business at Beira. It is a loss the country can ill afford. Furthermore, a widened war could inflict serious damage to Mozambique, with Rhodesian strikes at railways, roads and guerrilla camps.

Then there is the specter of South African involvement. Officials in Pretoria have been hinting that direct Cuban assistance to the guerrillas would force South Africa into the war on Rhodesia's side, a move with disastrous economic implications for Mozambique.

As much as a quarter of South Africa's exports move through Maputo, generating employment and foreign exchange. Mozambican miners continue to flow to South Africa's mines, and the retained portions of their earnings, delivered to their government, reportedly amount to more than $100 million a year.

An Iowa Mother Regains Custody Of 2 Children Taken to Israel

TEL AVIV, Nov. 29 (AP)—An Iowa woman has regained custody of her two children by order of the Israeli Supreme Court after they were allegedly abducted to Israel by their father.

Beverly Davis, 24 years old, of Urbandale, Iowa, appealed to the court after discovering that her ex-husband, Samuel Copeland, 56, of Chicago, had taken the children, 4-year-old Ami and 14-month-old Cecilia. An Illinois court had awarded her custody of the children.

Mr. Copeland claimed that he wanted the children to have a Jewish upbringing, but the judges ruled that "this is a clear case of child abduction."

rley on Rhodesia akes Up Question Of Interim Regime

Special to The New York Times

NEVA, Nov. 29—Participants in the ence on Rhodesia's future, unable ree on a date for the transfer of al power from the white minority black majority, formally shelved sue today and began discussing the on of an interim government in-development came as two black alist leaders ended their long holdout against talking about anything else before Britain, the conference chairman, had committed itself to a firm date for granting formal independence to Rhodesia under black rule.

As a result, the British chairman, Ivor Richard, briefed the two nationalist leaders—Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe—on London's views about the projected biracial interim government that would prepare for independence.

Although the Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith proclaimed Rhodesia independent of Britain in 1965, his action is regarded as legally invalid. The black nationalists insist that it is incumbent on Britain, as the colonial power, to "decolonize" Rhodesia and to insure the transfer of power there to the black majority.

Bishop Abel Muzorewa and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, the other black leaders, had previously agreed to shelve the issue of the independence date, as did the delegation of the Smith Government. Mr. Richard has already briefed them on British proposals for an interim government.

While Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe ended a holdout that had deadlocked the conference since it began on Oct. 28, they issued a statement today asserting that they stood by their demand that Rhodesia's independence should come no later than Dec. 1, 1977.

The two nationalists, who have joined for the talks in what they call the Patriotic Front, said they remained "unable to accept" the British estimate that 15 months would be required to complete the constitutional and other legal processes for the transition from white-minority to black-majority rule.

Smith Issues a Warning

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith said tonight that his Government would be forced to make alternative plans if the Geneva conference moved away from the original proposals for a settlement.

In a press statement, Mr. Smith called on the chairman, Ivor Richard, "to cease pandering to the fads and fancies of the black politicians at Geneva and to make a start on the business of the conference."

Founder of Religious Sect in India Is Sentenced for Killing Defectors

NEW DELHI, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—An Indian railway clerk who founded a mysterious religious sect was sentenced to life imprisonment today for murdering six defectors from his movement.

Prabhat Ranjan Sarkar, 55, who founded the Ananda Marga, or Path of Bliss, sect in 1955, was found guilty last week of murder, conspiracy to murder and destruction of evidence. Mr. Sarkar and four followers convicted with him were sentenced to life imprisonment for the killings, which were alleged to have been carried out in jungles near Jamshedpur in Bihar State, home of the sect, in July and August 1970.

Mr. Sarkar has said he had eight million followers in India, Britain, the United States, Canada, the Philippines and Australia. He has been in jail since 1971, and his sect was banned in India last year after the Government declared a state of emergency.

Jet Hit by Lightning Returns

BOSTON, Nov. 29 (UPI)—A Trans World Airlines 707 jetliner landed here about eight hours behind schedule last night after it was struck by lightning and repairs were made in Shannon, Ireland. No one was injured. The jetliner, TWA flight 753 with 124 passengers aboard from London to Boston, landed at Shannon to refuel because of a fliers' strike at London's Heathrow Airport.

SOUTH KOREAN SHIFT OF SPY UNIT REPORTED

signed here will report to Han Pyung Ki, the deputy ambassador in the South Korean Observer Mission at the United Nations in New York. He recently spent three weeks in Seoul reportedly to receive new instructions, according to the Korean source.

A spokesman for the Korean Embassy appeared to confirm the report on General Kim's recall by declining to deny it. He said that "it is customary not to make any comment on the transfer of the staff of the Embassy." But when asked about the transfer of a military attache on K.C.I.A. duty here, the spokesman readily reported that he had left five months ago.

A spokesman for Mr. Han, reached by telephone in New York, confirmed that the deputy ambassador had been in Seoul, but said the report on his K.C.I.A. role was "without foundation."

The Korean source said that intelligence officers in Los Angeles, where five have been posted, and in San Francisco, Chicago and other cities were also being transferred. A Korean consulate official in Los Angeles said by telephone that the report of the transfers was "not true," but then added, "That information is very confidential."

Anti-government Koreans and Americans with access to intelligence reports estimate that 25 K.C.I.A. officers have been posted in the embassy and consulates here, under what is known as "diplomatic cover."

Such officers are career officials on the intelligence agency's payroll as opposed to the special operatives whose objective was to lobby in Congress or "deep cover" agents posing as ordinary Koreans in business or other jobs.

The K.C.I.A. officers are responsible for communications with Seoul, administration and financing of the apparatus here, gathering intelligence information that cannot be obtained through normal diplomatic channels and for surveillance and harassment of the Korean community to ward off exile movements against President Park.

These officers have diplomatic immunity and, therefore, cannot be questioned by United States investigators, called before the grand jury currently hearing evidence or summoned as witnesses in court. But they can give information voluntarily, and it is against this possibility that Seoul has evidently recalled them.

The new K.C.I.A. chief in the United States, Ambassador Han, is married to the daughter of President Park and his first wife, whom he divorced many years ago. The President's second wife was killed by an assassin's bullet intended for him in August, 1974.

Mr. Han is said to have a direct line to President Park and until now was charged with influencing the Korean community to support the President. There has been much opposition to him inside and outside Korea for his authoritarian measures in the last five years.

The Korean source said that Mr. Han would operate with a staff of six officers, two each stationed at the United Nations mission, the Korean Consulate General, and his office in New York.

Ambassador Han reportedly supervised a Korean gift of $1 million to Harvard University last year to promote Korean studies there. The Korean source said that the Korean Traders Association, under instructions from the K.C.I.A, had collected the funds from Korean businesses for the gift.

Mr. Han also recently bought a $205,000 house in Scarsdale, N.Y. There are rumors in the Korean community that the large, red brick chateau style house would be a refuge for President Park if he is overthrown. But that could not be confirmed.

With the reported recall of General Kim, the present K.C.I.A. station chief, and other officers, it appears that the agency's network in this country has been fractured for the time being. Earlier, the agency reportedly ordered the number two man, Kim Sang Keun, to return home.

He was reportedly the contact man with Park Tong Sun, the Korean businessman whose mission was to influence Congress. Mr. Park was last reported in London in K.C.I.A. custody to prevent his return to the United States.

Sue Park Thomson, a Korean born woman on the staff of House Speaker Carl Albert may also have been compromised since the publicity about her appearance before a grand jury under immunity. Mrs. Thomson has been identified as a K.C.I.A. operative by several Korean ex-officials and American officials.

But other special K.C.I.A. operatives are reportedly still in action, including Pak Bo Hi, the head of the Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation, who has been identified by several Korean and American sources as an intelligence agent. Mr. Pak is also chief lieutenant of the Rev. Moon Sun Myung of the Unification Church.

A foundation financed by that church, the International Cultural Foundation, sponsored and paid for a large conference of prominent scientists here last weekend. According to Korean sources, Mr. Moon's mission is to improve the image of Korea among influential and ordinary Americans.

In addition, secret K.C.I.A. agents working in the various Korean communities in this country are still active. Korean residents here regularly report new incidents of harassment and threats.

Fire Destroys Finnish Mill

HELSINKI, Finland, Nov. 29 (AP)—A fire believed to have been set by arsonists is estimated to have caused $15 million in damage at the A. Ahlstrom paper mill at Varkaus early today, company officials said. The fire destroyed storage sheds and more than 10,000 tons of paper and pulp at the mill about 200 miles northeast of Helsinki. The police said the fire started at five places almost simultaneously at 2 A.M.

Souvanna's Son Says Father Is a Puppet Of the Pathet Lao

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Nov. 29—"I wish my father had stayed here instead of returning to become again a puppet in the hands of the Pathet Lao," said the son of former Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma of Laos.

The longtime leader of the pro-Western Government came to Paris in September and, to the deep regret of his family, former political associates and the large Laotian exile community, returned to Vientiane, the Laotian capital, on Oct. 30. He left, according to his son, Prince Mangkra Souvannaphouma, without telling his three children living here that he was going and without saying goodbye.

"My father refuses to recognize that he has been deceived by the Pathet Lao," Prince Mangkra said in an interview. "He lives completely cut off from the world. My father was a great political leader, but his political life ended in 1974."

In that year, a coalition Government was formed by the pro-Western and Pathet Lao forces. The Communists quickly gained the upper hand, although Prince Souvanna remained nominally in charge until a year ago. Then the Communists overthrew the monarchy, established a so-called people's republic and reduced Prince Souvanna from Prime Minister to "counselor" to their Government.

"My father is like a man who loved his wife most of his life but finally preferred his mistress," said Prince Mangkra. "He wanted to show so much sympathy for the others that he has finished by rejecting his real friends."

Prince Mangkra said he thought that his father had placed too much confidence in his half-brother, Prince Souphanouvong, the nominal leader of the Pathet Lao, who is now President of the republic. "Now both are serving as mere ornaments," he said.

In the Prince's view, which is widely shared, the real leadership is the group around the new Prime Minister, Kaysone Phomvihane, a tough Communist who was believed to have close relations with North Vietnamese leaders during the Indochinese war.

In September, for the first time since the Communist takeover, Prince Souvanna was allowed out of his country to see his physician and settle legal problems with his estranged wife, who lives in Paris. The Prince, who is 75 years old, suffered a heart attack two years ago.

Souvanna Always Under Surveillance

His son, a former colonel in the Royal Laotian Air Force, said that during his stay his father had not once been allowed to speak privately with him or with his other son and daughter living here. "There was always either the Pathet Lao minister who accompanied him or some leftist Laotian students who did not leave him out of their sight," Prince Mangkra said.

In the brief contacts they had, Prince Mangkra said, his father accused his daughter-in-law of having persuaded Prince Mangkra to flee from Laos last year and urged the son to return. He also demanded that Prince Mangkra show him the manuscript of a book he was writing. Prince Mangkra said it had already gone to the publisher. The book was published recently under the title, "The Agony of Laos."

"Since then my father has disinherited me and our bridges have been burned," Prince Mangkra said.

In the book, the Prince is at pains to defend his father's policies but, with evident reluctance and discomfort, he depicts Prince Souvanna as being finally duped by the Pathet Lao, particularly Prince Souphanouvong.

Toll in Kenya Train Crash Put at 12

KATHEKANI, Kenya, Nov. 29 (UPI)—At least 12 people were reported killed early today when an exppress train ran onto a flooded bridge whose rails had been swept away, crashed through it and plunged into a river.

The Kenya News Agency reported that the death toll was at least 12 and that 70 were injured in what railroad officials called the worst passenger-train disaster in East African history.

The train carried 600 people. Witnesses said scores were trapped for hours in one car stuck in the mud of the river, which was swollen by rains. Axes and blow torches were used through the night to rescue passengers. Among those who escaped injury were a party of 17 American students, some Peace Corps volunteers and score of delegates attending the general conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Nairobi.

The derailment occurred at 2:20 A.M. as the Mombasa-to-Nairobi express rolled through a thunderstorm across the Ngaineithia River bridge near this tiny station in big-game country, 137 miles southeast of Nairobi, the capital. Initial reports broadcast by the Government's Voice of Kenya radio said hundreds were feared dead.

Railway officials said the river had risen 20 feet before the train arrived and that the water was over the tracks. The current swept away parts of the concrete support of the bridge and the rails themselves.

The weight of the engine collapsed the bridge, the railway officials said, and seven cars behind it jack-knifed off the embankment and rolled into the mud and water. "One coach was completely submerged and two others were lying on top of it," said a British passenger, Ian Vincent.

Dissident Yugoslav Is Reported To Be on a Jail Hunger Strike

The dissident Yugoslav writer, Mikail Mikhailov and two other political prisoners have been on a hunger strike since Sunday, the writer's sister said yesterday.

Maria Mikhailov said, according to Reuters, that her brother's wife learned of the hunger strike during a prison visit last Saturday and telephoned the news to Miss Mikhailov, at her home in Virginia, the same day. The writer, who was jailed two years ago after publishing articles in Western publications without permission, refused a package of food brought to him by his wife, the sister added.

Miss Mikhailov said that in addition to her brother, an Orthodox priest named Savva Bankovich and a man whose name she did not know were on a hunger strike in protest at a new Yugoslav penal code.

Soviet Airliner Crashes On Takeoff in Moscow; 72 Are Believed Killed

MOSCOW, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—A Soviet airliner crashed shortly after takeoff here last night and Western airline sources said all 72 people on board were killed.

A spokesman at Sheremetyevo Airport confirmed that a Tupolev TU—104 turbojet of the Soviet airline Aeroflot had crashed on a flight to Leningrad. He would not give a casualty figure.

Western airline sources, quoting airport workers returning from the crash scene, said the aircraft came down about five minutes after takeoff and hit the ground 20 miles from the airport at 6 P.M.

It was the fifth crash of an Aeroflot plane reported this year. Two have not been confirmed by official Soviet sources. The Soviet media do not usually report crashes of planes on domestic flights. If foreigners are among the victims, authorities inform the embassies concerned.

The twin-engined TU—104, which went into service in 1956, is regarded as the pioneer of jet travel in the Soviet Union.

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

SHINGTON, Nov. 29—A former of covert operations for the Central gence Agency says that the United gave paramilitary training to East- uropean volunteers for intervention tential national uprisings in Hun- Poland and Rumania in 1956.

es Angleton, head of special opera- nd counterintelligence in 1956, said interview that the agency began g hundreds of Eastern Europeans one of his operatives obtained a f the secret speech in which Nikita rushchev denounced Stalin's crimes the 20th Congress of the Soviet unist Party in February 1956.

Angleton, who retired from the last year, maintained that his mo- vas to "balance out" an account C.I.A.'s handling of the speech pub- by Ray S. Cline, then a top-ranking gence analyst at the agency. Mr. who was in charge of Chinese-Sovi- airs in the Office of Current Intelli- and later became deputy C.I.A. or before going on to the State De- ent, included the account in his issued autobiography, "Secrets, and Scholars."

'There Was No Payment'

Angleton, in presenting his account, that soon after the Khrushchev h became known in the West, the Director, Allen W. Dulles, ordered o obtain a copy as a matter of the st priority. A covert agent acquired ext in April 1956 from a European nunist whose motive for handing it was said to be ideological. Repairs Specified As Alaska Pipeline Nears Completion

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 29—The trans-Alaska pipeline was about 50 welds from completion today after a ruling of the Department of Transportation that delineated exactly where joints must be repaired.

The Alyeska Pipeline Service Company had asked for exemptions from further repair work on 612 of the 3,955 welds that were questioned in an audit last year.

While awaiting a decision, the company went ahead on an accelerated repair schedule so that by today only 34 questioned welds remained unrepaired. The work has cost about $55 million, a spokesman said.

Only three welds were exempted in today's ruling by John W. Barnum, Deputy Secretary of Transportation. These three joints are 17 feet beneath the bed of the middle fork of the Koyukuk River, 25 miles north of the Arctic Circle in the drainage area of the south slope of the Brooks Range.

As are many other Arctic streams, the Koyukuk is a "braided river" that flows in ever-shifting shallow channels across a widespread stream bed of gravel, which overlies permafrost. The three exempted welds are in a channel not now used by the river.

"Under the circumstances, I am satisfied that the variances in these welds do not endanger the mechanical integrity of the pipeline, and it is not sensible to dig them up, considering the cost and the further risk of environmental damage," Mr. Barnum said in a telephone interview.

Last year, Alyeska discovered a lack of documentation for inspection of certain welds joining the sections of pipeline together. This led to an examination of the practices of contractors doing the X-ray inspection of the welds.

Discoveries there led to a full audit of all the welds on the 800 miles of pipeline and the finding that 3,955 welds were not properly documented by the quality control program. After some delay the company then began last spring its accelerated program to repair each of the questioned welds.

The pipeline company has complained that the standards its welders were held to are unnecessarily high, because they are based on dimensions of faults that apply to much smaller-diameter pipe.

Mr. Barnum said that the errors in the three joints that he passed were arc burns, where the welder's torch heated a section of the pipe away from the joint; a small bit of incomplete fusion in one pass of welding, and a bit of elongated slag in one pass in a seam.

He ordered the company to repair the other 31 welds, the last of those challenged in last year's audit of the welding. He said that he would have passed 21 of these as suitable, had it been necessary to dig them up, but the company's repair program has already exposed the joints. So he ordered them fixed.

The other 10 welds had faults that required repair even though they had to be dug up, he said. These faults included incomplete fusions, incomplete penetration of the joint by welding passes, large gas pockets in seams, hollow beads, arc fault that would weaken the pipe, and porosity defects turned up by X-rays.

National Universities of Latin America in Sharp Decline in Argentina, a university-bred youth movement gave the late Juan Domingo Peron the exciting aura he needed to return to the presidency after 17 years of exile.

But in the last decade, student politics took a radical new turn as the university's elite status came under attack from within its own cloisters.

Under the slogan, "The revolution passes through the university," students became the most important source of recruitment for urban guerrilla movements. And, in a phenomenon not entirely unrelated to guerrilla politics, an effort was made to force open the university gates to working-class youth.

University Enrollment Trebles

With the elimination of entrance exams in some countries and a deliberate government effort to dilute entrance requirements in other nations, university student enrollment has trebled in Latin America over the last decade. Either because of campus unrest or because of unwieldy student bodies, the decline in educational standards has been dramatic, and the credentials of new graduating classes of lawyers, engineers, doctors, architects and other professionals are being increasingly questioned throughout the hemisphere.

Argentina's system of higher education, once considered the best in Latin America and worthy of comparison with some European universities, has suffered the most dramatic turnabout.

Plainclothesmen, with guns bulging beneath ill-fitting suits, search visitors to the turn-of-the-century downtown building that houses the administration of the National University of Buenos Aires.

In the corridors, the grime of decades encrusts the formal portraits of forgotten scholars and bronze plaques recalling a bygone era of academic excellence. A half-dozen professors, slouched in faded leather chairs in the foyer, wait listlessly for long-overdue appointments with the new rector—the seventh in three years of violent turmoil at Argentina's leading university.

According to the rector, Dr. Sol Libertario Rabassa, his immediate concerns are to reduce student enrollment and wipe out the vestiges of leftist influence at the university in keeping with the guidelines set forth by the right-wing military regime that took power in a coup last March.

The Unthinkable Concept

"The concept of an independent university left to its own affairs is unthinkable today," Dr. Rabassa said. "If we want order, we need professionals who know how to handle weapons to defend us. We need policemen in the university. In fact, I cannot imagine what would happen if they left."

Although violent upheavals in Argentina in the last few years have focused attention on the university situation here, the deterioration of the state system of higher education is also apparent in other major Latin American countries.

In Mexico scores of thousands of university students participated in peaceful demonstrations in 1968 calling for political and economic reforms and an end to widespread government corruption. The then Minister of the Interior, Luis Echeverria Alvarez, directed a bloody repression that left at least 200 students dead and hundreds more in jail.

Once he reached the presidency in 1970, Mr. Echeverria used a carrot-and-stick appoach with students. Leftist demonstrations were suppressed with the use of right-wing thugs, but a number of important student leaders were bought off with ranking government jobs. The student movement has been reduced to hard-core, much-divided Communist factions, while the majority of activists have been ideologically neutralized by the sight of their leaders and mentors cooperating with the President.

Teaching Quality Declines

Under President Echeverria, now at the end of his term, university enrollment has risen from 308,000 in 1970 to 700,000 today. But in the words of one university professor, "the investment has been in building and not human resources."

Under the avalanche of new students, the quality of teaching has fallen sharply, especially in the national university, where such departments as law, medicine, engineering and architecture have lost much of their traditional prestige. Middle-class Mexicans are increasingly sending their children to private universities such as the Ibero-Americana in Mexico City and the Technological Institute of Monterrey.

In Brazil, the right-wing military Government that took power in 1964 was intent on destroying the political strength of the universities. Large-scale purges of students and professors were carried out, and demonstrations and all political activity have been banned. But the military, imbued with the ideals of national development, has expanded university enrollment from fewer than 200,000 in 1964 to a million students this year.

"The intellectual level of the students who are entering the universities is falling every year," asserted the Brazilian novelist Osmar Lins, who quit his university post in disgust earlier this year after discovering that many of his students had only a rudimentary writing ability and were completely ignorant of Brazilian literature, their chosen specialty.

"The Brazilian educational system is transforming itself into a gigantic fraud," stated a recent editorial in Jornal do Brasil, one of the leading newspapers. "What will become of these new generations? What can the country expect from them?"

Lack of Planning Noted

The Brazilian Ministry of Education also expressed its concern in a document last year that lamented the expansion of university education "without any systematic planinng."

In Chile, the state universities fell into disarray under the late Marxist President Salvador Allende Gossens as enrollment mushroomed and opposing ideological factions produced pitched battles on campuses. Under the harsh right-wing military Government that reached power in the bloody 1973 coup, thousands of leftist professors and students have been swept out of the universities in a wide-ranging anti-Marxist purge.

Graduate studies, particularly in the politically suspect social science departments, have been suspended. Other courses have suffered a sharp decline in teaching quality with the departure of talented professors not pedagogically attuned to the new regime. And an effort has been made to cut down the large student enrollment and make the university tighten its belt economically.

The political and economic disarray in Argentina has brought most public institutions to their knees.

Political purges have long been a fact of life. During the first Peronist era, 25 years ago, anti-Peronists and leftists were often dismissed. In 1966, a right-wing military regime carried out a widespread antileftist university purge with strongly anti-Semitic overtones.

Guerrillas Recruit on Campus

But not even these episodes hinted at the convulsion that overtook the state universities beginning in 1973 with the return of the Peronists to power. At first, the universities became a citadel for the Peronist left and their allies. Non-Peronist and conservative professors were physically assaulted and dismissed. Guerrilla groups openly recruited on campus. And within two years, an "open admissions" policy instituted by leftists, who also ended most written examinations for courses, sent enrollment soaring from 80,000 to 237,000 at the National University of Buenos Aires.

Even while the Peronist Government was still in power, a right-wing backlash exploded on the state university campuses. Leftist professors were purged only months after announcing "a new revolutionary era." The Buenos Aires campus was turned over to a self-declared fascist rector, Alberto Ottalagano, who justified the new repression as a religious crusade.

"We Christians possess the truth and we do not share it," said Mr. Ottalagano. "The rest do not have it, and we shall treat them accordingly."

The repression of the left has continued, under the military regime, and guerrillas have ceased to be an important political factor on campus. Students continue to account for a large percentage of the more than 1,500 victims of political violence who have been killed since the beginning of the year.

The decline of educational standards continues at the national universities under the crushing student enrollment. Today, most professors in state institutions count on the absence of a majority of the students because if they all showed up the classrooms would not be big enough to hold them.

Most Teachers Aren't Paid

"Ten years ago, my seminar had 20 students," recalled an economics professor who has been at the National University of Buenos Aires for more than a decade. "All of them are now well known in international economic circles. Today, I have more than 150 students in my seminar, and 1,000 students in my regular class. I don't know their names or their backgrounds, and at the end of class I am hoarse from shouting out my lectures."

The vast majority of professors at the national university here and elsewhere in Latin America are not paid salaries. They practice their professions—medicine, law, accounting—and give classes at the universities for reasons of prestige, or because they enjoyed the academic atmosphere.

Those scholars who depend on university teaching for a living lead a hectic existence. With salaries of $100 to $150 a month, they take posts at two or three universities and spend hours a day commuting by bus from one to another.

"The private universities may not offer better salaries," said a sociology professor who recently moved to the Catholic University, "but you can teach without worrying about being denounced as a fascist or a Marxist. You can count on students showing up to class. You have libraries with the books listed in the card catalogues."

The professor, who was dismissed from the National University of Buenos Aires for political reasons, said he had overcome his "prejudices against the Catholic University."

University in "Absolute Chaos"

"For me, the University of Buenos Aires was a more exciting place," he explained. "The students were more of a cross-section of Argentine society. The Catholic University is a lot more homogeneous. The students are less politically conscious. But that does not matter to me anymore. The National University is absolute chaos."

Perhaps one of the most impressive examples of the phenomenal growth of private universities in Latin America is the University of Belgrano.

Beginning in 1964 with 90 students and 12 professors in a dilapidated hotel in Belgrano, a fashionable residential neighborhood in Buenos Aires, the university today has 14,000 students, 1,200 professors and 10 buildings. Tuition is $20 a month, high in these times of economic hardship.

Several of its undergraduate and graduate departments are now considered the best in the country. Its rector, Aveline Porto, a lawyer in his forties, was elected earlier this month as first vice president of the Union of Latin American Universities, the most important association of its kind.

There are no guards at Belgrano. Few of its students have been victims of political violence, and, in the rector's words, "no professors have been thrown out the windows."

"This is an oasis," said Mr. Porto in an interview at his newly furnished office, with piped in music as background. "I can assure you there are more political debates going on here than at the state universities, and the police have never come through these doors."

Yemen Forbids All Foreign Planes To Fly Over Southwest Coast Area

SANA, Yemen, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—Yemen today banned all foreign planes from flying over a wedge of territory bordering Southern Yemen and said intruders would be fired on without warning.

The ban was announced by the Foreign Ministry two days after Yemen said that a pair of "enemy aircraft" had flown over its southwestern corner twice within eight days.

Flights are forbidden over a triangle of territory bordered in the west by the strait Bab al Mandab, a waterway linking the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean.

U.S. Hailing New Mexican Leader

Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 29—In a significant gesture of good will toward the incoming Mexican Government, the United States is sending an unusually high-level delegation to the inauguration ceremonies Wednesday of President-elect José López Portillo.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who arrived here tonight after a five day vacation in Acapulco, is to head the 12-member official United States delegation, which also includes President Ford's son Jack, as a special ambassador, and Senator Mike Mansfield.

In addition, President-elect Jimmy Carter's wife, Rosalynn, will attend the inauguration as a guest of Mexico's future first lady, Carmen Romano de López Portillo, while Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon is due to arrive here early Wednesday from the Soviet Union, answering a private invitation from Mr. López Portillo.

Lady Bird Johnson, widow of the former President, is also flying here tomorrow for the inauguration.

Diplomatic sources said that after the deterioration of relations that has accompanied the last three years of the administration of President Luis Echeverria Alvarez, Washington was symbolizing its desire for warmer ties with the López Portillo Government by sending a senior delegation to the inauguration.

Since 1973, relations between the United States and Mexico have been particularly embittered by President Echeverria's frequent charges that Washington is blocking progress toward creation of a "new world economic order" and his suggestion that American conservatives are somehow responsible for recent political unrest here.

Mr. López Portillo, on the other hand, has indicated privately that he will seek a less bitter relationship with Washington.

But in the next few days there will be little time for substantive discussions. The new President must attend some 1,200 foreign guests, including the official representatives of 102 nations.

Nevertheless, he is expected to find time for a private meeting with Mr. Kissinger, while Mrs. Carter will personally deliver a letter to the new Mexican leader from her husband.

Mr. Kissinger, who was to confer shortly after his arrival with Mr. Echeverria, will also hold talks with Mexico's new foreign minister, who will be named tomorrow night. Accompanying the Secretary of State are his two experts in Latin-American affairs, Assistant Secretaries of State William D. Rogers and Harry W. Shlaudeman.

ost for Mrs. Abzug With Carter Urged; Beame Backs Her

By MARTIN TOLCHIN
Special to The New York Times

/ASHINGTON, Nov. 29—Representa- Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhat- is being considered for a top post he Administration of President-elect my Carter, a Carter representative Mayor Beame today.

he conversation came to light as it learned that Mayor Beame and ernor Carey had held patronage dis- sions with representatives of Mr. Carter in an effort to place New Yorkers in key jobs with the new administration.

The Mayor was asked by Mr. Carter's aide whether he had any objections to a top Federal post for Mrs. Abzug, according to Howard Rubenstein, a public relations consultant and one of Mayor Beame's closest advisers. Mrs. Abzug was defeated in the primary for United States Senator by Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

"The Mayor is backing Bella," Mr. Rubenstein said.

It could not be learned, however, what post Mrs. Abzug was being considered for or who in the Carter camp had solicited the Mayor's opinion of her possible appointment.

Mrs. Abzug, who has been proposed for a Cabinet post by feminist groups, said:

"I haven't heard from anybody. I don't know what they have in mind. I personally have made no requests."

The Mayor and Governor, who hope to establish formal patronage links with the incoming Administration, have succeeded in placing nominees on the lists of those being considered for Cabinet and other posts.

The Mayor's discussion concerning Mrs. Abzug also suggests that Mr. Beame and Mr. Carey may be given veto power over prospective nominees from the city and state.

"The Mayor has been active in discussions dealing with the hunt for high-level talent," said Mr. Rubenstein.

David Burke, secretary to Governor Carey, said that "the Governor was called by many people for recommendations, and he has made recommendations to them."

Mayor Beame, working alone and through Mr. Rubenstein and Ira Millstein as intermediaries, has pushed Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti for Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and Mental Health Commissioner June J. Christmas for a post in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, among others.

Mayor Beame and Governor Carey would not only extend their own patronage through their ability to recommend Presidential appointments but also would assure the appointment of Federal officials sympathetic to the needs of New York City and State.

Mr. Burke said that Governor Carey had been asked by Vice President-elect Walter Mondale, Robert S. Strauss, Democratic national chairman, and others to make recommendations "not restricted to urban posts."

Mr. Burke said that the Governor had written a number of letters to Mr. Carter and his aides, urging the appointment of several New Yorkers.

The letters involved appointments "at different levels," Mr. Burke said.

"There is a small list of people who are excellent and outstanding, and a larger list of people who are not ready for a Cabinet appointment but may work their way up to it," Mr. Burke said.

He said that the nominees involved a large number of women, blacks and Puerto Ricans.

Mario M. Cuomo, New York Secretary of State and a confidant of Governor Carey, said he had discussed patronage appointments with Landon Butler, who served in Mr. Carter's Presidential campaign and now serves on the President-elect's personnel advisory group.

Mr. Cuomo said that he had left the discussion with the certainty that "they're eager to hear what's on the Governor's mind, as far as appointments."

Mr. Carter's representatives are expected to meet soon with Mayor Beame's representatives to work out a modus operandi concerning patronage. A later meeting with Governor Carey's representatives is also expected.

Mayor Beame's timely endorsement of Mr. Carter last May and the fact that New York City gave the President-elect his margin for victory in New York State prompted Mr. Carter to call Mr. Beame on election night and say, "Abe, I love you."

Governor Carey made a later endorsement, but vigorously campaigned for Mr. Carter.

ICE AGES ATTRIBUTED TO EARTH ORBIT SHIFT

Scientists Find Periodic Changes in Path Around Sun 'Positive Test' of Climatic Theory

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD

Periodic changes in the earth's orbit around the sun have been identified as the "fundamental cause" of the ice ages, a team of American and British scientists reported yesterday.

After years of puzzlement and scientific dispute, the cause was established by reconstructing the earth's climatic history back nearly half a million years and comparing cycles of climate change with cycles of changes in the shape, tilt and seasonal positions of the earth's orbit.

Dr. James D. Hays of Columbia University, leader of the scientific team, called the "match" of the climate and orbit cycles a "positive test" of a theory that was promoted in the 1920's by Milutin Milankovich of Yugoslavia. The theory could not be proved until it became possible, in the last few years, to probe farther back in the earth's climatic history.

"We are certain now that changes in the earth's orbital geometry caused the ice ages," the scientists said in a statement released by Columbia. "The evidence is so strong that other explanations must now be discarded or modified."

Prediction Held Possible

The scientists said that their discovery should make it possible to predict the start of the next ice age, though there is no need for immediate concern.

The last great glaciation brought ice sheets down over most of Canada, the northern part of Europe and Asia and much of the northern United States 18,000 years ago. It was one of eight major ice ages of the last 700,000 years. About 11,000 years ago the ice retreated to its present state, and the earth is now in one of its warmest periods.

But a moderate cooling trend has already begun, Dr. Hays said, adding:

"If you project the relationship between the orbits and the climate in the future, this cooling trend should continue for on the order of 20,000 years. In that length of time I think there is not much doubt that we will build substantial ice on the northern Hemisphere continents."

Team of Scientists

Working with Dr. Hays were Dr. John Imbrie, professor of oceanography at Brown University, and Dr. Nicholas J. Shackelton, a geologist at Cambridge University. Their discovery will be reported in the Dec. 10 issue of Science.

Dr. Hays, a professor of geology at Columbia and its Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory, heads the CLIMAP project—the acronym for Climate: Long-range Investigation, Mapping and Prediction. The project is operated by a consortium of universities and funded by the National Science Foundation.

Dr. Hays and his group made their discovery through an analysis of microorganisms preserved in cores of sediments taken from beneath the floor of the south Indian Ocean. The cores penetrated deep enough to provide an uninterrupted record of the earth's climate dating back 500,000 years, three times farther than scientists had been able to go before.

The cycles of climate change were then determined by the alternating layers of species of warm and cold-preferring microfossils known as radiolaria.

Method of Analysis

Further evidence, Dr. Hays said, came from measuring the ratio of two different types of oxygen molecules in the shells of plankton. This enabled the scientists to discern past changes in global ice volume.

The longest cycle measured in the cores, about 93,000 years, matched the length of cyclical changes in the shape of the earth's orbit, ranging from nearly circular to elliptical and back. During the last 10,000 years the orbit has been more elliptical, which puts the earth closer to the sun for a longer period on each orbit.

The length of the second cycle in the cores, about 41,000 years, matched the length of changes in the tilt of the earth's spin axis with respect to the earth's orbit around the sun. This varied from 22 to 24.5 degrees over the increased tilt causing hotter summers and colder winters.

All of these changes in the earth's orbital geometry, the scientists said, are caused by the gravitational tugging of the other planets, particularly Jupiter.

The effect of these changes is to alter the seasonal and latitudinal distribution of incoming solar radiation at the top of the atmosphere.

Today, for example, the earth is closest to the sun in January and farthest away in July. This means cooler summers and warmer winters, a condition that should in time promote the building of an ice sheet because the cooler summers permit the previous winter's snow to last to the following winter.

PARDONS BOARD HEARS GILMORE'S CASE TODAY

Utah Killer Expected to Ask Panel to Speed Up His Execution Date

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 29—The Gary Mark Gilmore case goes before the Utah Board of Pardons tomorrow as the next step in the condemned killer's extraordinary fight for his death.

In a reversal of the routine drama of last-resort pleas and strategies to hold off an execution, the board is expected to hear the 35-year-old convict argue that he is prepared to die before the firing squad as soon as the authorities will permit it.

The expectation here is that the three-member board will remand the case back to the trial judge to set a new execution date, which could be scheduled for next week.

Motions for Review Expected

However, attorneys representing other condemned men, in addition to others concerned about the resumption of the death penalty in the United States for the first time in nearly a decade, were expected to file a variety of motions in state and Federal courts asking for a review of Utah's statute on capital crimes.

This new law, enacted in response to recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on capital punishment, has not been reviewed by the high court in a test of its constitutionality. It closely resembles a Texas law that the Supreme Court has approved, except that the Utah law does not provide for mandatory review of the condemned man's trial and conviction.

Legal authorities here believe that this omission could be the grounds for further delays in the Gilmore case, perhaps long delays that could frustrate the convict's expressed hopes for a speedy execution.

The hearing before the pardons board was not requested by Mr. Gilmore but by Governor Calvin L. Rampton. The Governor has endorsed implementation of the death penalty for some crimes, but he is reported to be sensitive to the absence of automatic review provisions in the legislation he signed into law two years ago.

Lost 12 Pounds

Mr.Gilmore is nearing the end of the second week of a hunger strike that began after he recovered from an overdose of barbiturates taken in an apparent suicide pact with his girlfriend, Nicole Barrett, a 20-year-old divorced mother of two.

Mrs. Barrett has been confined since her recovery in Utah State Hospital for observation by the psychiatric staff, and Mr. Gilmore has said that the refusal by authorities to permit him to communicate with her prompted his hunger strike. He has lost more than 12 pounds since he limited his diet to water and coffee, but prison officials say his health is sound.

George W. Latimer, chairman of the Pardons Board, said in an interview that he would not permit testimony at tomorrow's hearing that is not relevant to the specifics of Mr. Gilmore's case.

"We'll let anyone talk who wants to," said the 78-year old former State Supreme Court Justice, "but we're not going to allow anyone to start arguing the pros and cons of capital punishment, or how this execution might affect the cases of others on death row."

Mr. Latimer, who entered the national spotlight seven years ago as the civilian defense counsel of Army First Lieut. William L. Calley, who was convicted in a court martial for his role in the My Lai massacre of Vietnamese civilians, acknowledged that the board found itself in an unusual position.

"We'll hear any extenuating and mitigating testimony as to why this man's sentence should be commuted," he explained, "but we're not empowered to hear all the legal arguments."

Mr. Gilmore is now represented by two new defense attorneys retained by his uncle. His original trial counsels were dismissed by the condemned man when they attempted to appeal his case against his wishes. His next set of lawyers were fired last week.

Dennis Boaz, a controversial figure since he emerged in a dual role three weeks ago as Mr. Gilmore's lawyer as well as his bargaining agent for rights to his life story, said that he was fired because Mr. Gilmore's suicide attempt had overwhelmed him emotionally. At the time, Mr. Boaz said he could no longer help expedite the execution, a position he later recanted when Mr. Gilmore recovered and apparently resented his lawyer's change of heart. One of the new attorneys is now concerned only with arranging the financial aspects of the case, negotiating with agents of movie companies and other media interested in obtaining rights to the story.

"The action is fast and furious," Mr. Boaz remarked the other day. "It's gruesome and so macabre, even if some of the profits go to the family of the victims. It's blood money, and in a way I guess I'm just as well off not being a participant."

Judge Rules F.A.A. Subject to Damage Payments In Death of Clemente and 2 Others in Plane Crash

By RICHARD WITKIN

A Federal judge in Puerto Rico has found the Federal Aviation Administration negligent and subject to damage pay*ments in the death of Roberto Clemente*, the baseball star, and two other passengers in a plane crash in December 1972.

The order, received here yesterday, said it was "reasonable to presume" that Mr. Clemente and the others, who were on a relief mission to Nicaragua after an earthquake, would not have been "passengers in this dubious enterprise" if F.A.A. employes had warned them that the plane lacked a proper crew and was overweight.

Charles F. Krause, a partner in the law firm representing the family of the former Pittsburgh Pirate outfielder, said that the amount of damage claims would be fixed after a separate trial. The suit brought on behalf of Mrs. Clemente and the three Clemente children asked for $5 million, but awards are almost invariably well below the asking figure.

All Five on Plane Killed

The accident involved a McDonnell Douglas DC-7 piston-powered plane that had just taken off from San Juan Interna*tional Airport with relief supplies for vic*tims of the earthquake that had devastated Managua, Nicaragua, a few days before.

The plane made an unusually long takeoff run, started a left turn over the water and smashed into the ocean about a mile and a half offshore. All five persons on board—the pilot and co-pilot plus the three passengers—were killed.

The public, in Mr. Clemente's native Puerto Rico and wherever baseball was followed, was saddened by the crash. The 38-year-old ballplayer was regarded as one of the most talented performers the sport had ever seen and had been working hard to organize the aid program for the Nicaraguans.

The decision finding negligence was handed down last week by Judge Juan R. Torruella of the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico.

A mainspring of the case against the Government was the charge that F.A.A. employees in San Juan had failed to abide by a directive issued by higher headquarters three months earlier. It required "mandatory inspection and surveillance" of arriving and departing planes of airline size that were not readily identifiable as being flown by regular airlines, other commercial operators, travel clubs, air taxi services or private corporations.

In the Clemente case, the plane did not fall in any of these categories, and therefore, the judge found, should have been checked when it was prepared for departure. It had been offered for hire to Mr. Clemente for his relief run by the young owner, Arthur S. Rivera, who flew as co-pilot even though he did not have a valid F.A.A. certificate to perform such duties in a DC-7 plane.

The judge also found that Mr. Rivera had tried in vain to secure the services of a qualified flight engineer. In addition, Judge Torruella's decision said that the 148,942-pound takeoff weight calculated for the plane was 4,193 pounds above the maximum allowed under the rules.

Exception Is Claimed

Government lawyers, in their defense, contended that the conduct cited by the plaintiffs as establishing negligence was covered by an "exception" in the Federal Tort Claims Act under which the suit had been brought.

This was the so-called "discretionary function" exception. It exempted from liability to damages any claim based on an act or omission of a Government employee who was exercising "due care" in carrying out a regulation, "whether or not the discretion involved be abused."

The Government said that the order to inspect arriving and departing planes was discretionary rather than mandatory, and that, because of a manpower shortage, the F.A.A. officials had properly exercised their discretion to inspect only arriving planes.

Rejecting this argument, the judge said: "At this late hour, such a contention smacks of litigation-oriented reasoning. Any possible residual discretion left to the [Puerto Rico] district office as to the operational implementation of this policy can hardly grant license to the mindboggling logic whereby arriving aircraft are given preference over those about to depart."

Yoshimura Jury Told of Arms

Associated Press

Wendy Yoshimura arriving at court in Oakland, Calif., yesterday.

OAKLAND, Calif., Nov. 29 (AP)—The prosecutor in the trial of Wendy Yoshimura, once Patricia Hearst's companion as a fugitive, said today that he would show the jury "a frightening arsenal" of weapons found in a Berkeley garage in 1972.

Jeff Horner, in his opening statement, said that the manager of the garage had found "a repository, arsenal and hideout of terrorists" when he broke open the room to check out a suspicious smell of gasoline.

Miss Yoshimura, 33 years old, who is charged with possession of explosives and a machine gun, is accused of renting the garage in 1971 as a weapons storage facility for radicals.

Miss Yoshimura dropped out of sight within hours after the Berkeley garage was raided by the police. She was captured with Miss Hearst in 1975 and is now free on $25,000 bail.

Mr. Horner, without mentioning Miss Yoshimura by name, said that the garage was rented on Aug. 3, 1971, by a woman who introduced herself as Ann Wong. He then described the woman's physical characteristics, which seemingly matched those of Miss Yoshimura.

Pair to Begin Contempt Terms

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 29 (AP)—Jay Weiner, 22, of Philadelphia, and Philip Shinnick, 32, will begin serving contempt of court sentences tomorrow for refusing to testify before a Federal grand jury investigating the 1974 harboring of Miss Hearst in northeastern Pennsylvania. The terms will last until they agree to testify or until the grand jury is discharged.

'Scottsboro Boy' Picks Up Alabama Pardon

United Press International

Norman Ussery, left, the chairman of the Alabama pardons and paroles board, presenting a pardon to Clarence Norris in Montgomery yesterday.

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON
Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 29—Clarence (Willie) Norris, the last known survivor of the "Scottsboro boys," returned to Alabama today and personally accepted a pardon from the state to close the books on the historic case in which nine black youths were convicted in 1931 on charges of raping two white girls on a freight train.

"It's a far different time from when I left," Mr. Norris told a newsman as he walked from the Montgomery Airport surrounded by photographers and in the glare of spotlights. At a later, quieter time he said, "I only wish the other eight boys could be here today—their lives were ruined by this thing too."

Answers and Tears

Mr. Norris was a stolid figure most of the time. He was calm and quiet. He was accommodating. He answered questions easily and he shook hands and posed for pictures. Now and then tears would well in his eyes and he would wipe them away with his hand.

The 64-year-old warehouseman for the city of New York spent 15 years in prison in this state, five of those years on Death Row. He was paroled in 1946 and immediately left the state and lived as a fugitive. Last month Gov. George C. Wallace and the State Parole Board granted him a pardon after appeals from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People both in Alabama and around the country.

After picking up the document and talking to reporters in the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, where the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was pastor, Mr. Norris and Roy Wilkins, the N.A.A.C.P. executive director, were among the 20 or so black and white activists, lawyers and political figures at a luncheon given by the state's Attorney General, William J. Baxley.

Although Governor Wallace took no part in today's events, both black and white political observers are saying here that it was his influence that led to the pardon. They assert that it followed a Wallace campaign of recent years to gain the increasingly important black political support in Alabama for his possible Senate race once his gubernatorial term ends in 1978.

Looking much like a business executive in a gray suit with a blue top coat against a 40-degree cold, Mr. Norris stepped down from a plane flight from Atlanta about noon and told a crowd of newsmen, "It feels good to be here and it feels good to be free."

He was taken by local N.A.A.C.P. officials to the state office complex. The chairman of the ... Norman Ussery, and one of the board's three members, Sarah Kellers, gave him the pardon document and wished him luck.

The party then spent a few minutes in the office of Mr. Baxley, who had lent his support to the campaign to pardon Mr. Norris several months ago. This support was based to a great extent on the findings in 1936 of Alabama Judge James E. Horton, who found no evidence to support the allegations of two white girls, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, that they had been raped. Miss Bates later recanted and said that she had not been raped.

A husky man who appears to be growing used to his celebrity status, Mr. Norris said at the news conference that his hope for the future was that he would be able to "talk to a lot of young people—to tell them that they can't get their freedom by running away from responsibilities."

"You've got to make a stand. You've got to fight for your rights," he said. He told the reporters, "I have two children, they were going to school and they had a father who was wanted by the law in Alabama for rape. I wanted my children and my wife to know that I was innocent. I had to try and keep on trying to get my rights."

Mr. Norris said that he had once telephoned the Alabama Governor's office about eight years ago but could learn only that he was still considered a fugitive. He said the official he talked to had asked for his name and telephone number in New York.

"I gave them a phony number and a phony address," he said, "and I stopped trying for a few years. Then I came back and I talked to Mr. Wilkins and I was determined that this time I would get my freedom and that I would not stop."

White Teachers Reject Black Merger in Louisiana

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 29 (AP)—An all-white Louisiana teachers organization voted down a proposed merger with its all-black counterpart in a move described by officials today as economic rather than racial. Louisiana remains the only state with segregated teacher associations.

Less than 4 percent of the 28,000 members of the white Louisiana Teachers Association voted on the merger proposal, which fell six votes short of the required two-thirds majority for approval in secret balloting at the state convention last week. The tally announced today was 665 in favor and 341 opposed.

Before the vote, officials had predicted that rejection might come from the black teachers, and Basile Miller, incoming president of the black group, was among opposition leaders.

But the black Louisiana Education Association, voting at a separate convention last week, approved the merger by a 68 percent margin, with just under 18 percent of its 11,000 members casting ballots. Black teachers voted 1,335 to 599 in favor of the merger.

Proponents of the merger had argued that it would create a unified political front in a push for pay rises and better working conditions. But opponents stressed that a merger would bring a $35-a-year rise in dues.

Deadline for Modification of Jumbo Jets Advanced

The head of the Federal Aviation Administration has advanced the deadline for modifying jumbo jets to protect them from crippling damage caused by loss of pressurization, it was announced yesterday.

Dr. John L. McLucas overruled the decision of a subordinate that would have authorized granting of delays until Dec. 31, 1978.

The modifications were ordered in July 1975 as a result of the crash of a McDonnell Douglas DC-10 outside Paris in which 346 persons were killed in March 1974.

The original order set a deadline of Dec. 31, 1977, for the changes. The subordinate issued an order allowing the airlines to apply for delays of up to a year. Dr. McLucas reversed that action, insisting on the original deadline for the DC-10, and authorizing delays of three and six months respectively for the Lockheed L-1011 and the Boeing 747.

In his decision yesterday, Dr. McLucas suggested that both the L-1011 and Boeing 747 were less vulnerable than the DC-10.

Polish Group Severs Tie With Episcopal Church

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 (UPI)—The Polish National Catholic Church is severing its 30-year-old sacramental relations with the Episcopal Church because of the Episcopal decision to ordain women as priests, officials said today.

The action by the 350,000 member denomination is the latest in a series of internal and external problems created by the Episcopal Church's decision last summer to ordain women. The Polish denomination rejects ordination of women.

"Sacramental intercommunion is terminated until a determination is made by our General Synod," read the terse, one-sentence statement. The break occurs Jan. 1, when the new ministry canon adopted by the Episcopalians goes into effect.

For the last 30 years, the two churchs have been in sacramental fellowship, meaning members of each denomination could receive holy communion in churches of the other faith.

Pennsylvania State Police Get New Rights Order

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 29 (UPI)—A court order in June 1974 aimed at reducing racial discrimination within the state police was modified by a Federal judge today to give minority group members wider hiring and promotion opportunities.

The state police force "has been significantly reduced and hiring and promotion significantly curtailed and delayed" because of "administrative actions" of state police officials, United States District Judge Clifford S. Green said in his modifying order.

Commissioner James D. Barger and other officials have contended that the reductions in personnel were caused by a "financial crisis" that arose after the order in 1974.

Judge Green changed the 1974 order to provide for one minority member to be admitted as a cadet for every non-minority cadet, instead of one to two hirings as provided in the 1974 consent decree. This is aimed at speeding achievement of a 9.2 percent ratio in the police force, roughly equal to the ratio in the general work force.

Low-Sulfur Coal Deposit Found in New England

SOMERSET, Mass., Nov. 29 (UPI)—Test borings over a 10-month period have found millions of tons of cleaner burning, low-sulfur coal in southeastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island, a geologist said today.

"The initial results have been so encouraging that we plan to proceed with further drilling exploration and analysis," the Rev. James Skehan, director of the Narragansett Basin Coal Exploration Project, told a news conference.

Father Skehan, a Jesuit priest who is also in charge of Boston College's Weston Observatory, said the drillings had confirmed earlier estimates that there is a "significant source of low-sulfur coal" in the area and said the quality was better than expected.

Low-sulfur coal emits less pollutants when burned than other forms of coal. Father Skehan said that the six exploratory drillings financed by the National Science Foundation "suggest the presence of nine million tons of coal" near Bristol, R. I., and 60 million tons of coal near Mansfield, Mass. The coal ran in seams up to 25 feet thick, he said.

...ord to Propose $10 Billion Tax Cut Similar to One Already Rejected by Congress

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

...SHINGTON, Nov. 29 — President ...fulfilling an oft-repeated campaign ...se, will ask Congress in January ...s a permanent $10 billion tax cut, ...hite House said today.

President's tax cut proposal, as ...ed today by Ron Nessen, White ...press secretary, would be similar ...legislation proposed by Mr. Ford ...ar and rejected by Congress.

...er the proposal, individual income ...emptions would rise from $750 to ..., yielding an aggregate reduction ...n personal income taxes of some $7.5 billion. Cuts in corporate taxes would total an additional $2.5 billion under the plan President Ford plans to send to Congress on Jan. 3.

The announcement of Mr. Ford's plans for a proposed tax cut came less than a week after a statement by President-elect Jimmy Carter that he does not necessarily intend to propose a tax cut as part of his policy to stimulate the economy.

It is considered unlikely that Congress would adopt the kind of tax cut proposed by Mr. Ford unless it were endorsed by Mr. Carter. Those Democratic members of Congress who have spoken out in favor of a reduction of taxes have tended to favor a tax credit rather than an increase in the individual exemption because that would give greater relief to low-income taxpayers.

At today's regular White House news briefing, Mr. Nessen said that President Ford planned to send Congress a couple of other special legislative messages in addition to his request for a tax cut, before leaving office on Jan. 20. He said that he could not yet disclose the nature of these messages.

Mr. Nessen did disclose, however, that Mr. Ford may deliver a State of the World address as well as his planned State of the Union message, before stepping down. Mr. Ford is also considering a separate farewell message to the American people, according to Mr. Nessen.

At the briefing, Mr. Nessen said that an article in the current issue of Newsweek magazine describing President Ford as bitter and depressed over his election defeat was untrue. "I can tell you that any speculation that the President has turned into a recluse or that the President is depressed just simply isn't true," Mr. Nessen said.

He said that "the President has a very good attitude," adding: "He is going to embark on a new and challenging phase of his life."

On another matter, Mr. Nessen said that the White House is "discouraging" lawsuits and other efforts now going on in several states to overturn the results of the Nov. 2 Presidential election. Such efforts are being undertaken in New York, Ohio and elsewhere by Republicans as well as the Labor Party, Mr. Nessen said.

"The President believes the election has been decided and he plans to leave office on Jan. 20," Mr. Nessen declared.

STRUGGLES IN G. O. P. APPEAR ON 2 FRONTS

Connally Indicates He's Interested in Becoming Party Head—Ford Favors Coordinating Panel

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—The struggle to revive and control the Republican Party broke into the open on two fronts today.

John B. Connally, the former Democrat and onetime Texas Governor, made it clear that he was interested in becoming the new Republican national chairman, but only if major elements of the party supported him and did not require him to leave his lucrative law practice.

At the White House, President Ford was reported to favor revival of a Republican coordinating committee, like the one established after the disastrous 1964 election, to provide broad political guidance from different kinds of officeholders with varying philosphical views.

After a speech to the Republican Governors Association, Mr. Connally told reporters that he had refused an offer by the President to head the national committee after the party's national convention in Kansas City last August because circumstances were different then.

Present Chairman Resigning

"If he had been re-elected, as I expected," Mr. Connally said, "frankly, I would not have the job. A party chairman with an incumbent President is one thing, a chairman without a President is something else, an assignment of far greater proportions."

The present national chairman, Mary Louise Smith, will resign in mid-January, and the national committee will elect her successor. Other possibilities, in addition to Mr. Connally, include a candidate backed by Ronald Reagan and his supporters and a political technician supported by party moderates and liberals.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, said that the coordinating committee envisioned by the President would be designed to unite the party rather than permit domination by any one faction. It would include Republican governors, members of Congress, national committee members and elder statesmen.

Asked about the value of such a committee, Mr. Connally said that he was not opposed, but that "I doubt they would be producing the kind of leadership you need, on a day-to-day and hour-by-hour basis, that only the chairman can provide."

In an informal news conference in the corridor of the Hyatt Regency Hotel here, Mr. Connally maintained that he was not campaigning for the party post "privately or publicly," and that he did not know whether he would accept the job if it was offered to him.

He acknowledged, however, that he had discussed the possibility with President Ford, Mr. Reagan and Vice President Rockefeller, thus indicating that his interest in the chairmanship was clearly more than speculative.

Conditions Are Outlined

He said that he would consider leading the party if he received "a considerable amount of support" from elements headed by the President, Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Reagan, and if the present ban on outside employment by a chairman was ended.

Asked why he was unwilling to leave his Houston law firm temporarily to serve as chairman, Mr. Connally replied, "Just because I'm not going to do it."

The chairmanship pays $42,500 a year, which is believed to be far less than his income as senior partner of Vinson, Elkins, Searls, Connally & Smith, which includes more than 150 lawyers.

Some Republicans have suggested that the new chairman be required to take a pledge not to compete for the 1980 Presidential nomination. Asked if he would do this, Mr. Connally replied, "No, I would not."

"Are you a candidate?" a reporter continued.

"No, I'm not," he said. Later, he added: "I'm not a candidate for anything. I'll have some things to say, because I'm interested in the country and interested in politics, but that doesn't mean I'm a candidate for anything."

Little Voter Fraud Found In New Mail Registration, But the System Has Bugs

By RONALD SMOTHERS

New York City Board of Elections officials said yesterday that there was little evidence of fraud resulting from the state's year-old mail voter registration system.

Early indications are that fewer than 10 percent of the nearly 468,000 mail registrants were improperly enrolled, the officials said.

Of those improperly enrolled most were taken off the rolls by the Nov. 2 general election, according to Betty Dolen, executive director of the Board of Elections. But the process was delayed considerably by a flood of applications at the deadline, with little time left to check and process the forms, she said.

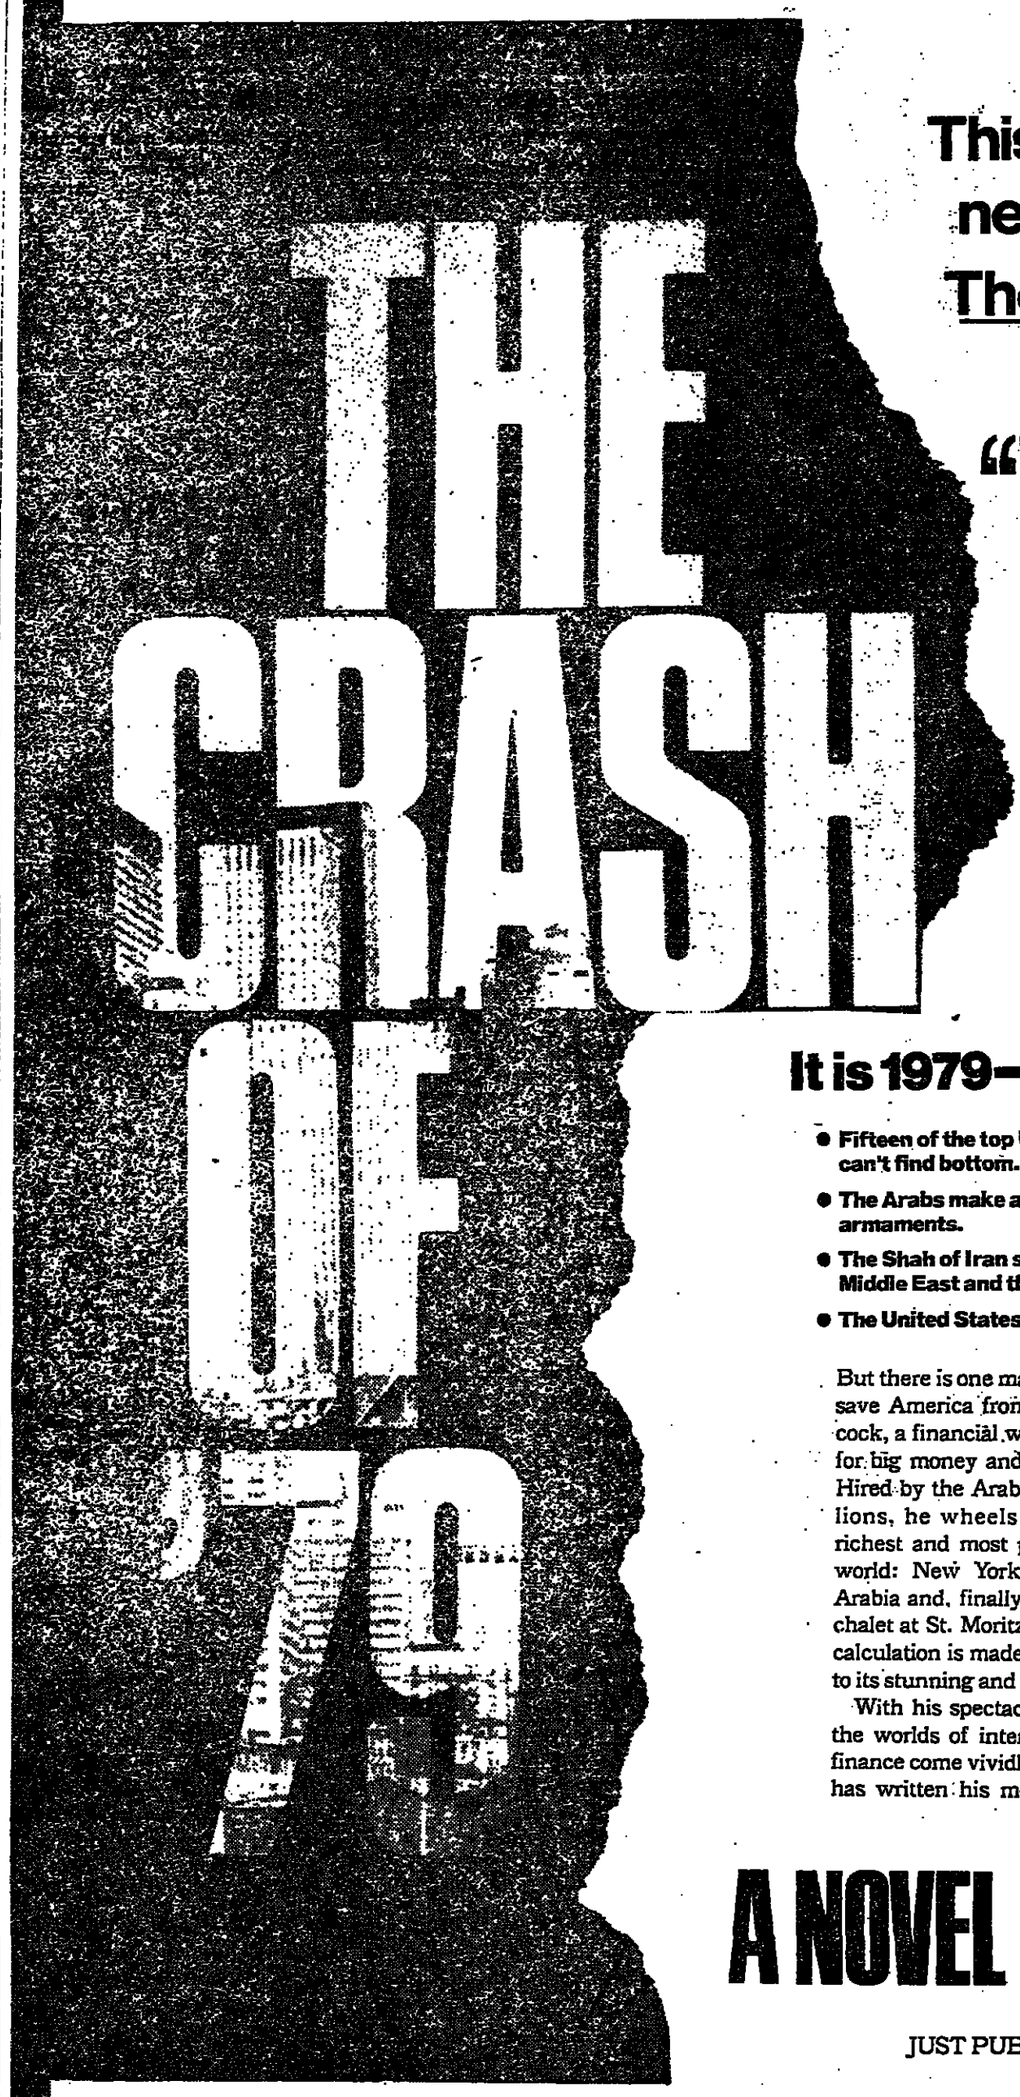
Mrs. Dolen was among about 15 persons who testified at an Assembly Elections Committee hearing on mail registration at 2 World Trade Center. The committee was seeking suggestions on changes in the new system as well as impressions on how well it had worked so far.

Major Fraud Doubted

"I'm not convinced that there is an overwhelming amount of fraud," said the committee chairman, Assemblyman Melvin Miller, Democrat of Brooklyn. "I think the main problem was administration, and we'll iron that out in the second year."

The major problem with the current system, according to most witnesses, is its dependence on the Postal Service for validation of new registrants in the short time available. With the mail registration period ending Oct. 4, the board had fewer than 15 days to mail out registration cards, according to Mrs. Dolen. The board's usual procedure is to invalidate the registration if the Postal Service returns the card twice because of inability to deliver it.

Now At Waldenbooks



This gripping and frightening new novel by the author of The Billion Dollar Sure Thing is being hailed as—

"The ultimate in disaster fiction."
—John Barkham Reviews

It is 1979—the year the world fell apart.

- Fifteen of the top U.S. banks are broke. Chrysler has folded. The Dow-Jones can't find bottom.
- The Arabs make a deal to bail out the banks in exchange for massive U.S. armaments.
- The Shah of Iran schemes to wipe out the Arabs and gain control of the entire Middle East and the world's oil supply. His chief negotiating weapon: The Bomb.
- The United States is rapidly becoming a third-rate power.

But there is one man who may be able to save America from disaster: Bill Hitchcock, a financial wizard with a keen eye for big money and magnificent women. Hired by the Arabs to manage their billions, he wheels and deals from the richest and most powerful spots in the world: New York, Washington, Saudi Arabia and, finally, the Shah's fabulous chalet at St. Moritz where the final miscalculation is made that brings the novel to its stunning and unexpected climax.

With his spectacular flair for making the worlds of international politics and finance come vividly alive, Paul Erdman has written his most enthralling novel yet, one that is gripping in its realism and totally absorbing in its suspense.

"I read it nonstop. I haven't enjoyed a book so much in months. I recommend it."
—Eliot Fremont-Smith, The Village Voice

"A slam-bang novel of international finance and scheming...Will be read with gusto."
—Eric Pace, N.Y. Times Book Review

"Erdman has succeeded again. Who'd have thought that numbers and money could be so much fun."
—George Harmon, Chicago News

suited for advice in order to test their acceptability and possible feasibility.

Depending on how it was implemented and how far-reaching it was made, any attempted limitation or prohibition on the movement of Federal employees into industries or businesses that do business with the employee's old agency could have major, perhaps traumatic, results in Washington and elsewhere. It might affect attorneys in Washington law firms, retired military officers going to work in defense industries and "consultants."

Mr. Powell was close-mouthed, and at times vague, about details of what had been tentatively decided today, but he dropped several interesting nuggets of information.

One was that Mr. Carter was now focusing on far more than restricting the movement into and out of industry by regulatory agency officials.

"We do see a problem when an individual worker for a Federal agency goes to work for a private agency that does substantial business with his department and uses the contacts he made to obtain favorable consideration for his employer," Mr. Powell said.

He also said flatly that Mr. Carter was considering asking Congress for legislation that would prevent by law such actions. It appeared likely that appointees of Mr. Carter would also be asked to make a voluntary commitment or pledge to avoid conflict of interests after leaving the Government, saying that he believed Carter appointees would see their Government job as an opportunity for service and "will, in fact, be willing to make a sacrifice."

Mr. Powell made clear that Mr. Carter recognized possible constitutional and legal questions involving restrictions on the conduct and employment of departing Government officials. He hinted that a flat prohibition on such employment was not the only answer, apparently a reference to possible measures to prevent a new corporate employee from handling matters which dealt with his former agency.

DIGGS SAYS THAT CARTER MAY JOLT SOUTH AFRICA

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Nov. 29—Representative Charles C. Diggs Jr. said today that the Government of South Africa appeared not to have realized that the inauguration of Jimmy Carter might herald a new and tougher American policy toward South Africa.

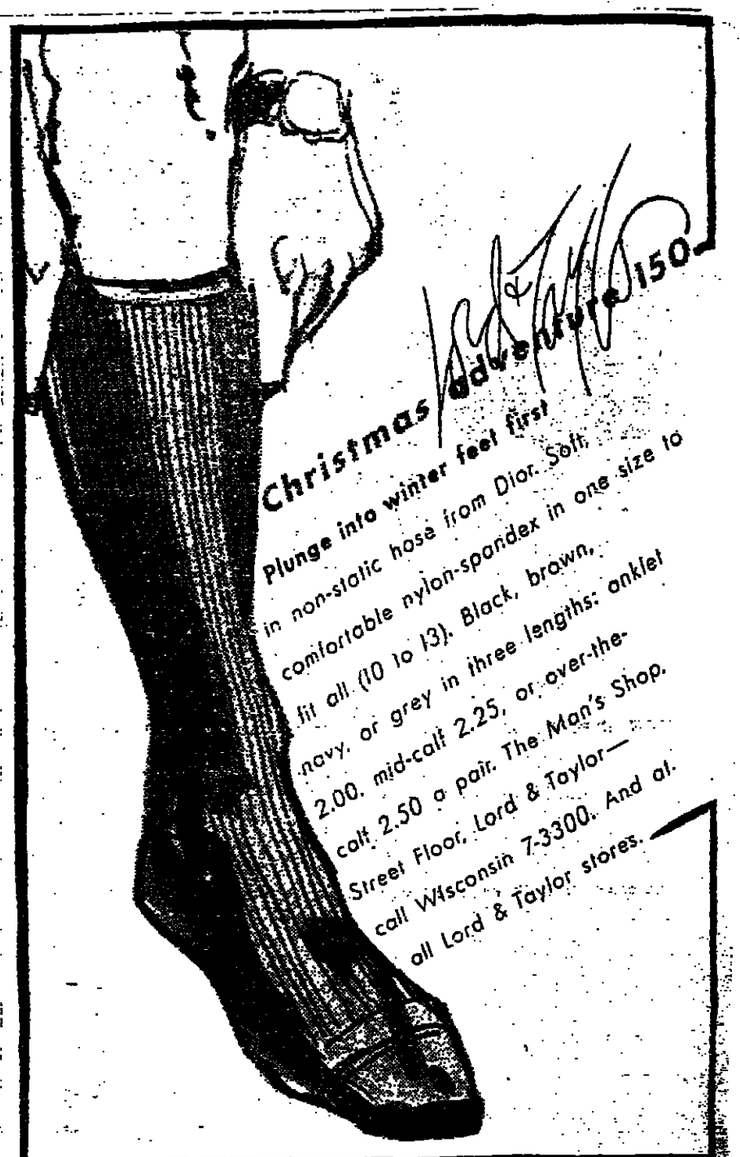
"Surely," the Michigan Democrat and founder of the Congressional Black Caucus said at a news conference at the airport here, "they have enough intelligence information to realize that we are talking about a new policy in the United States."

Mr. Diggs, who is visiting South Africa for the first time since 1971, met during a four-day visit here with Justice Minister James T. Kruger and Information Minister Connie P. Mulder. His request for a meeting with Prime Minister John Vorster was denied.

Mr. Diggs spoke before flying to Maseru, the capital of Lesotho, where he was to attend the conference of the African-American Insitute, an annual gathering of politicians and academics. The conference is to focus on future American policy toward South Africa.

Break-In at Inaugural Architects

ATLANTA, Nov. 29 (UPI)—The police said that the offices of the architects designing the reviewing stand to be used in President-elect Jimmy Carter's inauguration were broken into yesterday, but apparently nothing was taken. The break-in at the firm of Muldauer and Patterson in Atlanta occurred between 5 A.M. and 8 P.M., when the architects, who had been working on the reviewing stand designs, were out for supper. Atlanta police sent reports of the incident to the Secret Service.



Retirement money.

Now. Start with as little as $100. You'll get East River's highest interest rate plus special tax advantages. And retire richer than you ever dreamed possible.

Plan I — You Have No Pension Plan.
If there's no pension plan where you work, you can open an IRA account at East River and deposit, as a tax-savings deduction, 15% of your annual income (maximum $1,500 each person, or $3,000 for an eligible, employed couple). Both the money you contribute and the high annual interest earned are tax-free until retirement, when your tax bracket is likely to be lower.

Earn Maximum Interest With Minimum Deposit.
Start building your retirement money account immediately. Open your IRA account now with as little as $100 and begin earning East River's annual yield of 8.17% which is 7.75% a year compounded daily. And you can make deposits of $100 or more anytime during the year up to the maximum of $1,500 for each person. To qualify for this high rate, the money is required to be left on deposit in a savings certificate for a minimum of 6 years—maximum of 7 years. Other savings plans with shorter maturities are also available. However, interest rates and minimum deposit requirements vary with these alternative plans.

Special Combination IRA with Savings Bank Life Insurance Retirement Income Policy.
East River also has a special plan that combines Savings Bank Life Insurance with a high interest savings plan. This plan maximizes estate benefits in the event of your death or provides for annuity payments in your retirement years, starting as early as age 60, guaranteed for life! The insurance feature guarantees completion of that portion of the plan. Important disability benefits are available. Full details are available at any East River branch or call Alice Lyons at 374-4594.

East River Interest Is What Makes You Rich.
As shown in the table below, it's East River's high interest that changes modest savings into accumulated wealth. At $1,500 a year for 40 years, your contribution will amount to $60,000. But East River adds over $380,000 in interest, for a retirement total of more than $440,000 provided principal and interest remain in your IRA account until that time.

Recently Retired Or Changed Jobs.
If you're changing jobs or retiring and receiving a distribution from a qualified pension or profit sharing plan, you can "rollover" these proceeds within 60 days into an East River IRA plan and avoid paying any current income taxes on the distribution.

Plan II — You Are Self-Employed.
East River has a special Self-Employed Money retirement plan (Keogh) with newly increased tax benefits that allows you to deposit up to 15% of annual income (maximum $7,500 per year). Call or mail coupon for details.

Note: If you already have money maturing in a present HR 10 retirement plan that has not displayed the performance you anticipated, check our available high-yielding, guaranteed savings plans and compare.

Use the coupon to obtain more details or call (212) 374-4561. Or visit or call any of East River's 12 offices listed below for assistance in setting up your Individual Retirement or Keogh account now!

Table assumes annual deposit of maximum $1,500 annual contributions and on a constant interest rate of 7.75% compounded daily, an annual yield of 8.17%, available on our 6 to 7 year Savings Certificates with a normal minimum deposit of $1,000 and a federal tax bracket of 32%. The funds must be left on deposit for that time to obtain this rate. Available future rates may be more or less than present rates, depending on economic conditions and government regulations.

Premature withdrawals of Savings Certificate funds can be made only with the consent of the Bank. FDIC regulations provide that the rate of interest on the amount withdrawn be reduced to the passbook rate at the time of withdrawal from the date of deposit and 90 days interest be forfeited. Interest alone may be withdrawn in total FDIC penalty. There will, however, be a tax liability and penalty imposed by the IRS if withdrawals are made from the plan before age 59½. You might, however, start withdrawing the money from the account at age 70½ and no further contributions can be made thereafter.

NOTE: These amounts do not include Soc. Security benefits.

Carter's Aides Back Delay on B-1 Until Broader Issues Are Settled

By LESLIE H. GELB

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—Key advisers to Jimmy Carter have reached a consensus that a decision on production of the B-1 bomber should be delayed until May. Their viewpoint is the same as that at the Pentagon, but they have reached their conclusion for different reasons.

The Pentagon and Rockwell International, the producer of the bomber, are concerned that an effort to force Mr. Carter to make a quick decision might lead to a negative decision.

The President-elect's advisers, some of whom approach the subject from different ideological perspectives, believe that Mr. Carter cannot wisely take a stand on the $24-billion bomber program without first making several broader policy decisions.

These have to do with the future of the manned bomber program, the strategic arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union and a general sense of what other issues might have to be debated with the military.

Arguments for Postponement

Soundings from the Carter organization indicate that Mr. Carter has not focused on the problem since the end of the Presidential campaign, when he started to hedge his flat opposition to the bomber. As the campaign developed, he began saying, "I don't favor, at this point, continued construction of the B-1 bomber, but I do favor a continued research and development program if it should be necessary in the future."

As matters now stand, the Pentagon and Rockwell International, the developer of the aircraft, are trying to arrange for Mr. Carter to have until May to make a decision and to give themselves more time to make their case. If the arrangement is approved by the Ford Administration, it would have the effect of superseding Congress's deadline of Feb. 1 for a decision.

The law now prohibits the President from making any long-term commitment of funds for the production of the new bomber until Feb. 1. Until that date, the Air Force is allowed to obligate up to $87 million a month to keep open the production lines.

The case for postponement was made to Mr. Carter by some of his outside advisers, and other advisers expressed their views to Carter staff members doing transition papers. There is little enthusiasm for the new bomber among these advisers, including former high Defense Department officials like James R. Schlesinger and Paul C. Warnke, but most of them agree that the new President should make the decision in a larger context.

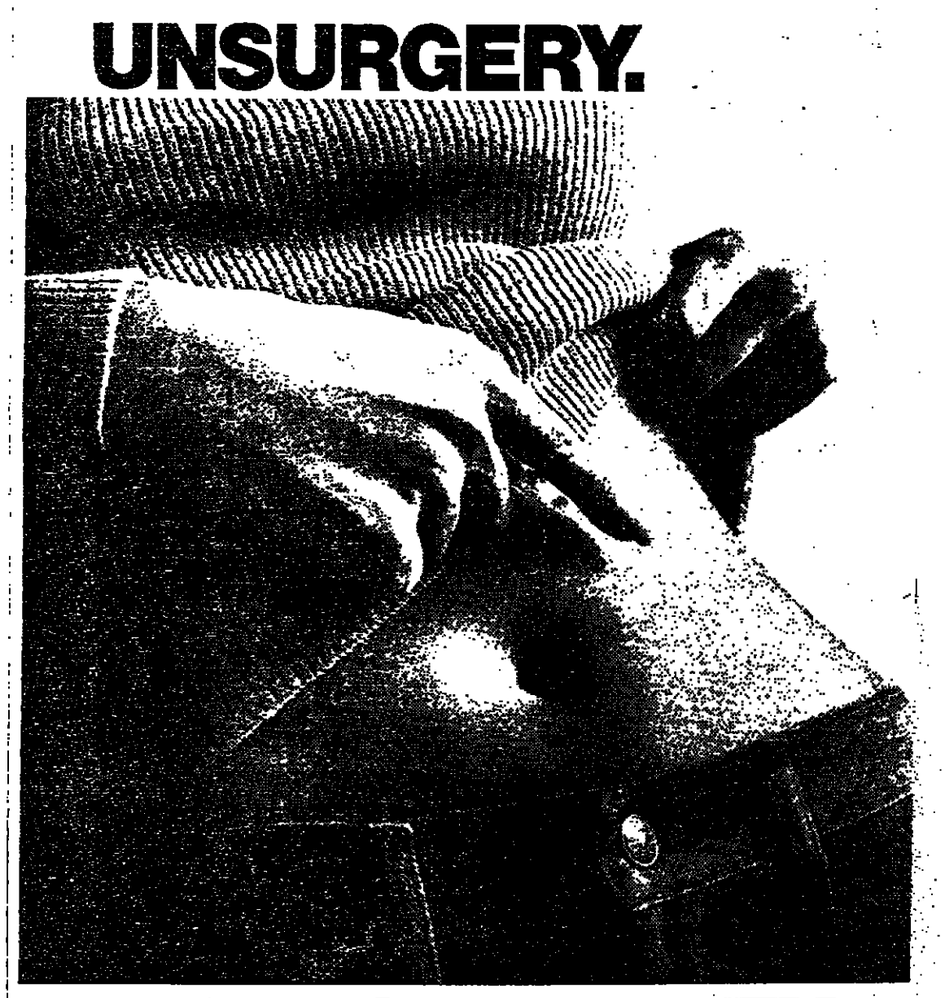
Position of the Air Force

One broader issue is the future of the manned bomber. The Air Force inventory of long-range strategic bombers consists of some 460 B-52's and 70 F-111A's. All of the latter and about 250 of the later model B-52's will be operational through the 1980's.

The Air Force is prepared to live with a strategic bomber force of about 300 as long as that includes the new B-1's. The question Mr. Carter will have to decide, the advisers say, is whether he is prepared to preside over a smaller strategic bomber force without the B-1.

The advisers say that Mr. Carter's answer should turn on the relative importance he attaches to manned strategic bombers in the age of relatively vulnerable land-based intercontinental missiles and relatively invulnerable submarine-launched missiles.

At the same time, the advisers point out that Mr. Carter's decision will bear directly on the future of the nuclear arms limitation talks with Moscow. If Mr. Carter decides to cancel the B-1, he will also probably have to make a greater commitment to the cruise missile program.



THE CURE WITH NOTHING TO SHOW FOR IT.

Unsurgery. The scar that didn't happen because you didn't go under the knife.

Unsurgery. The opinion of a second surgeon you saw, who said the operation wasn't necessary.

Unsurgery. The surgical opinion you didn't pay for, because it's the latest benefit from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York.

Research has shown that some surgery is unnecessary.

In non-emergency operations such as tonsillectomies, hysterectomies, prostatectomies, where a doctor recommends surgery as the best course of action, we'll now pay for the opinion of a second surgeon, if you have Blue Shield surgical/medical coverage. By calling the Second Opinion Referral Center you'll be given the names of three doctors selected from a list of 1,700 board-certified surgeons... a surgeon located in the area convenient to you. And your first surgeon need never know.

It's strictly confidential if you wish. Furthermore, all lab tests or X-rays ordered by the second surgeon are free.

And if the first and second surgeons don't agree, we'll pay for the opinion of a third.

Second opinions are only available in the tri-state area, as long as you have our Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York surgical/medical plan. Of course, you must arrange for your second opinion through our referral center.

All you do is call (212-481-2658) and we'll give you three names to choose from, in your area. Oh, one more thing. If the second surgeon agrees an operation is needed, that surgeon cannot do the surgery. You go back to your original doctor.

How's that for peace of mind?

Woodcock Calls Auto-Pollution Key To His Rejection of a Cabinet Post

By A. H. RASKIN

Worry over possible embarrassment to President-elect Jimmy Carter in deciding what to do about automobile antipollution controls was a key factor in the decision of Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Automobile Workers, not to accept an appointment to Mr. Carter's Cabinet.

In a telephone interview yesterday, the union chief put his concern on that issue first among the considerations that had prompted him to ask last week that his name be eliminated from the new President's selection list. Until his voluntary declination, Mr. Woodcock had been in the forefront of speculation as Mr. Carter's choice for Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

In the last session of Congress the auto union had lined up with the industry in supporting amendments aimed at relaxing some of the auto-emission standards set in the Clean Air Act of 1970. The union acted out of a desire to save the jobs of its members after becoming convinced that the original standards could not be met. However, in the closing days of the 94th Congress, the proposed amendments died after the industry decided it would rather have no bill than the compromise version produced by Senate-House conferees.

An Early Carter Supporter

"The industry handled itself very badly in the final days," said Mr. Woodcock. "The result is that the new administration and the new Congress will have to deal with a bad problem on auto emissions. Otherwise, the industry will be making cars next year that fail to meet the legal requirements. I would have a credibility problem if I were in D.H.E.W. when that problem comes up, and I think the President could face it better without that."

Mr. Woodcock, who must step down under a 65-year age rule when his present term as union president expires next May, had been among Mr. Carter's earliest supporters in union ranks. Carter aides originally sounded him out for designation as Secretary of Labor, but he indicated that his only governmental interest would be in the Health, Education and Welfare post because of that department's role in planning for national health insurance.

Among the factors that prompted Mr. Woodcock's decision to say no was a fear that he might deepen political cynicism within his own 1.5-million-member organization if he seemed to be turning the union's campaign support for Mr. Carter to personal advantage.

Will Push Causes

"When I communicated my decision to the union's General Motors council last Tuesday, their reaction of approval was so spontaneous that I was confirmed I had made the right choice," Mr. Woodcock said.

He stressed that his withdrawal did not stem from any slackening of enthusiasm for the President-elect, but he added that he felt he could advance such causes as national health insurance and full employment by staying independent of the Federal establishment.

Until his surprise announcement last week, most of his associates in the auto union had expected that a special executive board meeting would be held in December to receive his resignation and designate a successor to serve as president until the union's Los Angeles convention in May. That prospect also entered into Mr. Woodcock's decision to stay. "It would be more orderly to make the choice at the convention," he said.

Still another factor in his decision was an unresolved debate within the union high command on whether to reaffiliate with the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, which it left eight years ago out of dissatisfaction with the Meany policies. Mr. Woodcock is known to favor a return, but two of his colleagues—Irving Bluestone, a vice president, and Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer—remain unconvinced that this would be the best move for the auto union.

Witness for Friedgood Renounces Part of Testimony on Phone Call

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., Nov. 29—A defense witness testified last week that she had spoken to Sophie Friedgood on the telephone eight hours after the prosecution asserts that her husband, Dr. Charles E. Friedgood, murdered her. Today she testified that, when she told the doctor she had spoken with his wife, he advised: "Keep it in mind. Don't tell anybody. You may be called to testify."

Last Wednesday, the witness, Lillian Ruiz, a former medical assistant at a Brooklyn medical center where Dr. Friedgood performed surgery, testified that she spoke to Mrs. Friedgood at 9:30 A.M. on June 18, 1975. But the prosecution contends that Mrs. Friedgood died between midnight and 2 A.M., basing the time of death on autopsy results.

Today Mrs. Ruiz, who is considered an important defense witness, recanted much of her original testimony about when and to whom she had first disclosed the alleged telephone conversation. She testified this morning that, on the afternoon of June 18, 1975, she received a call from Dr. Friedgood's secretary informing her of Mrs. Friedgood's death.

"I told her," Mrs. Ruiz said, that "I spoke to Sophie Friedgood this morning." Two weeks later, Mrs. Ruiz said, she informed the doctor of the telephone conversation with his wife.

Last week Mrs. Ruiz testifed that she had first disclosed the phone conversation to Frank Steiner, an investigator for the defense, 10 days ago. While on the witness stand, she changed her testimony, saying that she had mentioned the conversation last month to John J. Sutter, the defense attorney.

At no time during the last year did Mrs. Ruiz give her information to the police or to the District Attorney's office, she testified last week. She testified then that, when she spoke to Dr. Friedgood shortly after his wife's death, she offered only her condolences.

Today, under cross-examination by Stephen P. Scaring, the prosecutor, Mrs. Ruiz, who is unemployed now, admitted that she had been in communication with the Kensington surgeon this month, calling his answering service four times and speaking to him twice on Nov. 21. Questioned by Mr. Sutter, Mrs. Ruiz said the recent calls concerned her mother, who is one of the doctor's patients.

Contrary to last week's testimony, when Mrs. Ruiz said she had read about Mrs. Friedgood's death only once in the newspaper, and that was on June 19, 1974, she testified today that she read several news reports of the investigation in September and November of this year.

...itness Who Gave ...n Alibi to Carter Recants Testimony

Special to The New York Times

...TERSON, N. J., Nov. 29—A former ...d of Rubin (Hurricane) Carter testi... today at Mr. Carter's retrial on ...ler charges that she had lied for him ...e witness stand nine years ago. She testified then that the former boxer ... with her when three persons were ...d in a Paterson tavern.

...e friend, Catherine McGuire, who ... the court she had dated Mr. Carter ... while before the murders, testified ... 967 at his first trial that he was ...ng her and her mother home at the ... of the Lafayette Bar and Grill ...ngs.

"I said he brought us home at 2:15 or 2:30 A.M., I sat and talked for a while with him then I sat on my porch and saw him pass again 15 minutes later," she said.

"Was this true?" Ronald Marmo, the assistant prosecutor, asked.

"No, it wasn't," Mrs. McGuire replied.

Alibi Being Questioned

Today, Mrs. McGuire said that it couldn't have been June 17," 1966, the day of the murders, that Mr. Carter drove her home, because she "would have remembered it" and that whatever day it was, it was at an earlier hour than she had previously testified.

Mrs. McGuire was the fourth person in two days to testify for the prosecution concerning Mr. Carter's alibi. The prosecution alleges that the four witnesses had helped to concoct an alibi for Mr. Carter in his first trial.

None of the witnesses, however, has mentioned the codefendant, John Artis, who, with Mr. Carter, was found guilty of the triple murder nine years ago. They won a retrial earlier this year.

Mrs. McGuire also testified today that last July "Rubin came to talk to me and said he wanted me to help him."

"I said I would, but I wouldn't tell a lie," she said. "I said there were a lot of lies going at the other trial, and I wouldn't do it again."

Under cross examination, Mrs. McGuire, referring to a memorandum that she wrote after her July meeting with Mr. Carter, said that she had told him she "remembered almost nothing" of what happened in 1966.

Earlier Testimony Rejected

Mrs. McGuire and her mother, Anna Mapes Brown, who appeared as a prosecution witness on Saturday to refute her own earlier testimony, both testified in the first trial that it was on June 17 that the former middleweight boxer drove them home. They both signed an affidavit, before that trial, to that effect.

That statement was given to Vincent J. De Simone Jr., lieutenant of county detectives, who was in charge of the overall investigation of the case, and whom the defense has charged with efforts to pressure witnesses into naming the defendants as the Lafayette Bar and Grill gunmen.

Present Relationship Stressed

In part of her testimony at the first trial that was read today, Mrs. McGuire testified that Lieutenant De Simone said "he would tear me from limb to limb" on the witness stand, if she did not tell the truth.

With both women, the defense has tried to show that it was probably in the early hours of June 17 that Mr. Carter drove them home, because June 16 was a Thursday, "Ladies Night" at the Nite Spot, a bar both said they often visited in 1966. The defense has contended that Mr. Carter was driving both women home from the Nite Spot at the time of the slayings at the Lafayette grill.

Mr. Carter's lawyer, Myron Beldock, also brought out the fact today that Mrs. McGuire, who is reportedly separated from her husband, has been engaged for several years to marry a detective in the Paterson Police Department.

She said that her relationship with the detective had played no part in her change in testimony.

Judge Bruno L. Leopizzi ruled in Superior Court that letters written just before the 1967 trial by Mr. Carter to Mrs. McGuire and three other persons were not admissible as evidence. However, he said they could be used to refresh memories about what the witnesses said at the trial nine years ago.

The prosecution has maintained that the letters reflected an effort on Mr. Carter's part to tell his friends how to testify.

Judge Leopizzi also said today that Selwyn Raab, a reporter for The New York Times, who has been subpoened by the prosecution to testify, could be admitted into the courtroom, although other potential witnesses are prevented from being present so they will not hear the testimony of other witnesses.

The judge said that Mr. Raab's permission to enter the courtroom would hinge on his agreeing to leave the room whenever asked, at times when testimony relating to his own was being presented.

Mr. Raab and The Times had no comment on the judge's remarks.

Brooklyn Grand Jury Starts Inquiry Into Policeman's Slaying of Youth

By PRANAY GUPTE

A Brooklyn grand jury yesterday began an investigation into the shooting of a 15-year-old boy by a police officer last Thursday night near a housing project in the East New York section.

District Attorney Eugene Gold said he would seek a second-degree murder charge against the policeman, Robert H. Torsney, 31. The officer has been suspended from the Police Department and is free on $20,000 bail, which was supplid by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association.

A second-degree murder charge is the highest homicide charge that can be brought against a person in the state, except for the killing of a peace officer, for which the charge can be first-degree murder.

Edward M. Rappaport, a lawyer who has been retained by the P.B.A. to represent Officer Torsney, said yesterday that he had advised his client not to appear before grand jury investigating the still unexplained shooting.

"He has already been charged, sa what's the point of his going before the grand juyr?'" Mr. Rappaport asked.

Responded to Radio Call

Officer Torsney was accused of shooting the youth, Randolph Evans, in thet head at point-blank range near Randolph's home at 515 Fountain Avenue. He was among six policemen who had responded to a radio call of a man with a gun that later turned out to have been a family argument.

Last night, Frank J. McLoughlin, deputy police commissioner for public affairs, confirmed that several hours before the slaying, Officer Torsney wrote in his official notebook: "Happy day. Felony day. Thanksgiving work day."

Mr. McLoughlin, however, declined to comment on the entry on the ground that the matter was being investigated by the grand jury. Last night in another interview, District Attorney Gold also refused to discuss the matter, including whether Officer Torsney had been given psychiatric examinations.

Meanwhile, hundreds of friends, neighbors and relatives of the dead boy gathered at a Brooklyn funeral chapel to view his body.

"He was very respectful and he didn't have the h eart for hurting people," said Nathaniel Bell, who identified himself as a friend of Randolph.

Jeannie Warner, a neighbor, asked: "Why him?"

The subject of any motive was also raised yesterday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Pecple, which said in a statement that it was "shocked and appalled" by the incident. It particularly cited the reported delays in the notification of high police commanders after the shooting.

But Mr. McLoughlin angrily characterized the statement last night as "irresponsible" and said it showed "complete ignorance on their part of the investigative process."

"The investigation was conducted properly," he said.

Holiday Donations Lag at College

STORRS, Conn., Nov. 29 (AP)—A University of Connecticut custodian who has raised $34,000 over the last 18 years to buy Christmas gifts for hospital patients is having difficulty making collections this year. The custodian, Theodore Serwanski, said he had put only eight collection canisters in university dormitories this year because last year 25 of them were stolen. Also, contributions so far amount to only $250, compared with at least $1,000 at this time in past years. Asked why contributions were so poor, Mr. Serwanski said: "Take a look at the pinball machines. I think the world of the students and faculty here, but I'd like them to open up their hearts just a little bit."

h Court to Rule on Mandating f Death in Slaying of Policemen

Special to The New York Times

INGTON, Nov. 29—In a surprise at created new confusion about on capital punishment, the Su- court announced today that it ecide whether it is consitutional ate to make the death penalty ty for anyone convicted of kill- ice officer.

ourt said that it would review in the context of a case it ac- e review three weeks ago involv- y Roberts, a young black man d to death in Louisiana in 1974 viction for killing a policeman.

ourt last July 2 issued a series s in cases challenging the death statutes of five Southern states, the Louisiana law under which rts was sentenced. The court by ote found that the death penalty inherently unconstitutional at murder and upheld the Georgia, nd Texas statutes. But by a 5-to- reversed the death penalty sen- the Louisiana and the North defendants.

urt's decision in the Louisiana olving a man named Stanislaus was widely, and seemingly sly, viewed as striking down 's law altogether. The Louisiana e, in fact, rewrote its death law afterward on just that urt's decisions in the Louisiana/ orth Carolina cases, moreover, ved as rejecting the concept of y death penalties, with one pos- eption raised by a footnote in e opinions—of murders commit- sons serving life sentences.

ther major action today, the marily affirmed a lower Feder- ruling invalidating an Indiana required abortions in the first three months of pregnancy to be performed in a hospital or in a licensed health facility, as opposed to a doctor's office.

The ruling is significant because while the Court's initial 1973 abortion decisions appeared to bar all state interference with abortions in the first trimester, some recent lower court decisions and a Supreme Court ruling appeared to suggest that a hospitals-only rule might be sustainable.

Today's action appears to mean that no state may impose a rule requiring first trimester abortions to be performed in certain facilities, such as hospitals.

The Court did not hear arguments on the issue, nor did it issue an opinion. Justice Byron R. White, in a dissent joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and William H. Rehnquist, said that the district court judgment affirmed by the Court majority was "extraordinary" and unfounded in the Constitution. They contended that the Court should have heard arguments on the case.

Recent court rulings on the death penalty have added to the controversy in New York in particular. The state's current death penalty statute provides for mandatory death sentences for killers of police officers and prison guards. State Supreme Court Justice Peter J. McQuillan ruled last month that the law was unconstitutional under the Supreme Court standards announced last July. This month, however, another judge imposed the penalty.

Louisiana's Attorney General, William Guste, voiced surprise when the court's brief announcement was read to him by a reporter.

"That sure does sound like they're reopening the issue of the viability of Louisiana's death penalty statute, doesn't it?" he said.

Tellerphone

Pay your bills by phone and collect 5¼% on your balance in this amazing account.

TELLERPHONE turns your phone into a bank teller. What a development! A whole new way to pay bills, brought to you by The Greater New York Savings Bank.

TELLERPHONE is a day of deposit to day of withdrawal account that pays 5¼% interest...but it has an amazing feature. You can use the money in this account to pay department stores, utilities, credit cards, the mortgage and most bills that come up regularly.

No check to write...no envelope to stuff... no stamp to lick. Imagine the convenience. When you want to pay some bills, you just call the TELLERPHONE number, and tell us who to pay and how much. You no longer have to write a check for these payments. You save postage every time. And you can call TELLERPHONE seven days a week: Monday to Friday 8AM to 8PM, Saturday and Sunday 8AM to 5PM.

You receive a complete and itemized statement every month. We even do the paperwork and send you a monthly statement describing all the individual payments you made.

And for all these advantages, the charge is only 10¢ each time you call, as long as you maintain a balance of $300 in your TELLERPHONE Account. You can make as many payments per call as you wish. And the local call itself counts as one message unit.

And there's more! With a TELLERPHONE Account you automatically qualify for a free checking account at The Greater, which you can use to pay other occasional bills that arise.

Thereafter, once you make your deposit, in person or by mail, you can do your banking by phone if you wish. Pay regular bills by TELLERPHONE...and, when you need to write some checks, use your TELLERPHONE Account to transfer funds into your checking account.

In my humble estimation, this has ordinary checking beat by a mile.

Moneywise, you are way ahead. Assume an individual makes a deposit of $500 on the 1st and 15th of each month in his TELLERPHONE Account. Say he makes five payments totaling $395 on the 5th of each month and four more payments totaling $230 on the 20th of each month. At the end of one year, said individual would have a very pretty financial picture: namely, a balance of $5,155.64 in his TELLERPHONE Account. He would have earned $158.04 in interest, and paid only $2.40 for 24 calls at 10¢ each. And remember, he would have saved postage, a whopping $14.04.

So, if you are impressed by figures like these, open a Greater TELLERPHONE Account today. You can do it in person at any of our 16 branches, or mail the coupon. And if you have any questions, call our TELLERPHONE number, 212-499-7000.

Supreme Court Refuses to Review Desegregation Plan in Wilmington

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—The Supreme Court refused today to review, at least for the time being, the sweeping city-suburban school desegregation plan imposed on the Wilmington, Del., area last spring by a three-judge Federal court.

The plan in essence consolidated the Wilmington school district, whose public school population is predominantly black, with 10 other districts. One of these also has a black majority and the nine others have more than 90 percent white students..

The court order called for the reassignment of students within the new consolidated area, saying that a school whose enrollments at each grade level were between 10 and 35 percent black would be considered "prima facie" desegregated.

The three-judge court issued its order as the culmination of years of litigation seeking to desegregate the Wilmington public schools. It gave the school officials until September 1978 to achieve full compliance.

The state and the nine largely-white districts appealed.

Opposed Impermissible 'Quota'

They disputed both the lower court's consolidation of city and suburbs and the part of the order regarding the 10 to 35 percent black student body,asserting that the court had imposed an impermissible "quota."

The Supreme Court technically "dismissed" the appeals, saying it did so "for want of jurisdiction." However, its action appears to leave the way open for further review of the lower court action, at least by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and possibly eventually by the high court.

Solicitor General Robert H. Bork, in a memorandum, said that the Court should dismiss the appeals for want of jurisdiction on the theory that the desegregation order should have been issued by a single district judge rather than a three-judge court. He added that the appeals should thus go to the Court of Appeals, which takes appeals from single district judges, rather than to the Supreme Court, which takes appeals from three-judge courts.

The Justices did not explain their reasoning for their action, but it appears likely they agreed with Mr. Bork.

The Supreme Court has held basically that before a Federal Court can order an "interdistrict" desegregation plan it must find that there has been an interdistrict violation.

In the Wilmington case, begun in 1957, the court previously found there were grounds, under the Supreme Court's standards, for an interdistrict remedy.

For years, up to the time of the Supreme Court's 1954 decision in the Brown case rejecting the concept of "separate but equal" schools, Delaware's public schools were segregated by law. The lower court found that in the years after Brown, there was still significant governmental involvement in interdistrict segregation of the schools in a variety of ways. it said these included state public housing policies that concentrated housing for blacks in Wilmington, and support at various levels of government for racial discrimination in housing in the suburbs.

Told to Submit Proposals

The lower court in that earlier stage thus issued a judgment directing the various parties to submit proposals for both intradistrict and interdistrict desegregation plans. The Supreme Court summarily affirmed.

The issue now is thus the extent of the remedy, rather than the existence of illegal segregation.

The Wilmington case has taken on added significance because of the Ford Administration's effort, disclosed last spring during the Presidential primaries, to find a test case in which to ask the Supreme Court to reconsider school desegregation law. Mr. Bork, in particular, espoused a view that, civil rights critics said, would limit the scope of a Federal Court's power to remedy proved segregative acts.

...gh Court to Hear Nixon Challenge of U.S. Control Over His Papers

...had asked the Court through the ...Department to deny Mr. Nixon a ... and simply to affirm the lower decision.

...ourt's action, announced without ...t, sets the stage for a landmark ...n the rights of Presidents and ...Presidents.

...specifically, it also gives the Jus... opportunity to elaborate on the ...of the Presidential "privilege" ...forced disclosure of confidential ...louse communications. That was ...ect of the Court's historic ruling ordering Mr. Nixon to give vari... recordings to the Watergate special prosecutor for use in the Watergate cover-up trial.

In the Nixon tapes case, the Court found that the privilege could sometimes be overridden by other interests, such as the need for materials in a criminal prosecution. But its decision established for the first time that there were constitutional "underpinnings" for at least qualified privilege.

The Court's action today further delays processing of the materials. The lower court, when it upheld the statute in January, barred almost all processing and disclosure pending appeal.

Mr. Nixon began his attack on the statute on Dec. 20, 1974, the day after President Ford signed it. The former President challenged it as unconstitutional on a variety of grounds.

He contended that it violated the principle of separation of powers, infringed on the Presidential privilege against forced disclosure of confidential Presidential communications, violated his right to privacy, denied him equal protection of the laws by treating him differently from other Presidents and infringed on his First Amendment rights of free speech and freedom of association.

The lower court disposed of each challenge. It gave some credence to Mr. Nixon's privacy claims, saying that he had a reasonable expectation of privacy, and that the law did pose a "not insignificant" invasion of his privacy. But the court also found that the law served national interests of "overriding importance."

Regarding Mr. Nixon's claim of privilege, the lower court made several points: It said that it was not sure that a former President could claim the privilege; that the law would in any event lead to only a minimal intrusion on confidentiality; that Congress might "rationally" have concluded that Mr. Nixon might not be a "wholly reliable" custodian.

In his appeal to the Supreme Court, Mr. Nixon reiterated most of his original complaints.

He contended that in "seizing and authorizing review and potential disclosure" of the materials of the Nixon Administration, "Congress has launched an unprecedented invasion of the autonomy of the executive branch."

"Would the Constitution permit the Congress to enact a 'Judicial Materials Preservation Act' that would subject to 'complete possession and control' of the Government every memorandum and document kept by Federal judges, including the Justices of this Court?" he asked.

The former President said that it would be possible, if Congress acted "carefully and within narrow limits, to implement overriding constitutional interests," for the legislature to compel disclosure of some specific information from the executive branch.

"But," he charged, "in this case, Congress employed not a delicate scalpel, but a cleaver."

On the privacy issue, Mr. Nixon faulted the lower court for stressing that the screening would be carried out by "professional and discreet" Government archivists.

"The intrusion on the sanctity of a man's life by Government personnel is itself what the Constitution forbids," he said.

Solicitor General Robert H. Bork, in a motion to the Court on behalf of the Government, rebutted Mr. Nixon's allegations.

Of the former President's contention that the statute infringed his right to privacy, he said, "His voluntary decision to seek the Presidency relinquished any 'privacy' interest in the way he conducted that office and administered the public trust."

He also said that Mr. Nixon had "expected to donate most of his materials to a Presidential library, where they would be read by others," and that Mr. Nixon's "principal purpose in making the tape recordings was to preserve the conversations for historical purposes."

A 'Small Percentage'

The Solicitor eGneral took issue with the lower court regarding the right of a former President to assert Presidential privilege. He said that a former President could assert privilege becaue privilege "attaches to the documents themselves." However, he argued that since no public access to the materials was imminent and screening by trained archivists posed no strong risk of a breach of confidence, the act did not infringe Mr. Nixon's privilege.

The volume of Presidential documents covered by the law has been estimated at 42 million pages. Mr. Nixon, however, in his appeal said that the case and the issue he raised "principally concern" only "that small percentage of material most intimately connected" with his "personal and political activities" in the White House.

This, he said, included his tape recordings and "some 200,000 other items personally prepared or reviewed" by Mr. Nixon.

Carter Will Be Able to Influence High Court, Despite Nixon Legacy

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 — Jimmy Carter will begin his Presidency faced with a conservative-leaning Supreme Court forged in sizable part by Richard M. Nixon. Unavoidably, Mr. Carter is bound by the Nixon legacy — but only partly.

Thanks to both circumstance and Presidential prerogative, Mr. Carter will have an immediate opportunity to begin influencing, indirectly, the Court when he takes office even though he will have no vacancies to fill.

There are no openings now on the Supreme Court, four of whose members were appointed by President Nixon on the basis of what he called their "strict constructionist" views. Majority opinions often carry six or seven votes, a comfortable margin over the five needed for majority, and the current Court seems settled in for some time to come.

This is the third in a series on the Federal Government in transition.

But there are other methods by which Mr. Carter can influence matters more quickly. And since five of the nine Justices, including three Nixon appointees, are 68 years of age or older, the President-elect may have as many as four or five seats to fill if he wins a second term.

Naming Solicitor General

The first way Mr. Carter will be able to influence the Court will be in appointing his own solicitor general, the official responsible for deciding what cases and issues to present to the Court on behalf of the Government—an official "sometimes called the 10th Justice," according to Paul Freund, the constitutional scholar, because of his great influence on the Court.

Mr. Carter will also get to fill immediately at least 23 lower Federal judgeships, according to the Justice Department's count. Congress is expected to create several dozen more Federal judgeships when the new session begins, and Mr. Carter will get to fill these as well.

The lower court appointments are significant in part because there are almost no women or blacks in the Federal judiciary, and Mr. Carter is likely to name a number of them. But the appointments are also important to the Supreme Court's work because the Justices often delay considering and deciding issues to see how the lower courts handle them.

Proposals for Change

Various proposals are under consideration in Congress and in legal circles for limiting or changing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, among them a suggestion for a new national court of appeals to rank just below the Supreme Court. Mr. Carter can affect the scope of the high court's work—the types of cases it decides—by taking positions on these proposals.

Mr. Carter can also affect the Court by his attitude and response to its work. The Supreme Court's rulings are generally not self-enforcing. In that sense they depend on the other branches of Government, and on public good will and respect for the Court.

The Court now has several clear themes: It favors the arguments of policemen and prosecutors over those of the accused; it sets strict limits on who may come into Federal court seeking help; it has given new strength to the rights of the states in relation to the Federal Government.

The Burger Court is far removed from the egalitarian and activist Warren Court that Mr. Carter's two Democratic predecessors faced in the 1960's.

Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., one of Mr. Nixon's appointees, summed up some of the differences this way in a speech last summer to the American Bar Association:

"The present Court, mindful of preserving the vitality of democratic processes, may be more deferential to legislative judgments. It is more likely to give some weight to federalism. And it is more conventional in demanding compliance with jurisdictional and standing requirements."

Prof. A.E. Dick Howard of the University of Virginia Law School, who is writing a book about the Burger Court, pointed in an interview to several differences in the way the Court functions now, compared with the way it functioned in the 1960's.

Different 'Values' and 'Interests'

There has been a change of doctrine, especially in the criminal law, he said, but there are also differences in the "values" and "interests" of the Court, in its relation to the political process and in the way litigants and various interest groups regard the Court as a "final" forum for their disputes.

Some of the new values in the Court's deliberations are well known. States' rights is one, as shown in the Court's decision last June striking down the laws that extended Federal minimum-wage and maximum-hour provisions to state and municipal employees. Law enforcement's ability to do its job is another, as shown by numerous comments in recent decisions about the difficulties faced by the police in making arrests.

Professor Howard cited another shift in values: the Warren Court was particularly sensitive to the plight of the poor, while the Burger Court is not.

A lawyer who did not want his name used because he has cases before the Court from time to time said the two Courts had "a different clientele." The Warren Court, he noted, was known for its landmark rulings advancing the interests and rights of the poor and of blacks; the Burger Court, however, has advanced the rights of women and of aliens.

Relationship to Political Process

The difference in the Court's relationship to the political process that Professor Howard cited—and that Justice Powell referred to in his remark about deference to legislative judgments—is equally marked.

In the Warren era, the Court often led the nation in making social policy—its school desegregation decision is an example, and so is its one man-one vote ruling.

The Burger Court made social policy with its decision striking down state laws that ban abortion, but it has seemed more frequently to defer to the political process. The Court's decision last July holding that capital punishment is not inherently unconstitutional, at least for murder, is an example. Without endorsing the penalty, the Court deferred to the state legislatures' judgment that the penalty is a deterrent.

Because of the Warren Court's activism and its pro-civil rights decisions, lawyers for the disadvantaged used to think of the Supreme Court as the place to make their pleas, the one place, perhaps, where they could get relief. Now civil rights groups often go elsewhere—to the state courts, in some cases, or to legislatures.

The Warren Court Filled a Void

There are various reasons for the changes. One is that the Warren Court filled a void; it acted because no one else had done so. But Congress, over the years, has become more active in civil rights legislation than it was when the Warren Court began, and the issues are somewhat different now.

According to many court watchers, there would have been at least some leveling off by the Court even if there had been no changes in its membership. "You have had some slowing up simply because of overloading of the circuit," according to Prof. Gerald Gunther of Stanford University.

But a major, perhaps the overriding, reason has been the four Justices appointed by Mr. Nixon: Chief Justice Burger, Justice Powell and Justices Harry A. Blackmun and William A. Rehnquist.

The four do not always vote together, and interests. Justices Burger and Rehnquist are markedly more conservative than the others, for instance.

The four do not alway vote together. Some of them have sometimes voted quite differently than Mr. Nixon might have wished—on abortion, for example, or on state aid to parochial schools and, most notably, against Mr. Nixon in the Watergate tapes case.

But all four take a more conservative, less activist view than did the Warren Court.

President Ford's appointment of John Paul Stevens lacked the impact of the Nixon appointments, for Justice Stevens is neither clearly liberal nor conservative and his ascent to the bench did not change its balance.

2 Remain From WarrenCourt

Two of the Justices from the Warren era who are still on the Supreme Court were themselves sometimes less liberal or activist than their Warren Court colleagues. On some issues, one or the other, or both has joined with some of the Nixon appointees to render the type of decision the Burger Court has been known for.

Mr. Nixon, as a result, was able to leave a much greater legacy in the judiciary than in the other branches of Government, if not always quite the legacy he had intended.

Though he has given few hints as to how he views the Court, Mr. Carter said during the campaign that he agreed with the Burger Court's trend against releasing a "person who is obviously guilty just because of a small technicality in the law."

In his third campaign debate with President Ford, he was asked what type of philosophy he would look for in making appointments to the court. He responded in part:

"The emphasis, I think, of the court system should be to interpret the Constitution and the laws equally between property protection and personal protection. So when there's a very narrow decision, which quite often is one that reaches the Supreme Court, I think the choice should be with human rights."

With so little evidence of Mr. Carter's intentions, court watchers and experts are for the moment merely guessing what he may do.

A President's biggest opportunity to make a mark on the Court is in his appointments to its bench. For Mr. Carter the opportunity has two parts: to change the recent trend on one or more issues, and to change the average age and the racial and sexual mix of the Court.

On many issues, however, one new vote will not be enough to change a trend. But on some it could be. The Court's decision on minimum wages for state employees was by a 5-to-4 vote. So was its decision in June allowing cities to use zoning laws, backed by criminal penalties, to restrict the growth of movie theaters showing sexually explicit films.

One vote may also mean that the Court will hear cases it otherwise would not hear, for a petitioner needs only four votes to win a hearing. When the Court summarily affirmed last spring, without hearing arguments, a lower court decision upholding a state's right to make homosexual conduct a crime, three Justices said the Court should have heard the case.

A Major Step Toward Victory

Getting the Court to review a case can sometimes be a major step toward winning. After the Justices hear arguments, said Norman Dorsen of the American Civil Liberties Union, "when it comes to a vote, everyone looks around for a compromise."

Given the Justices' ages, Mr. Carter may get his one appointment fairly soon. The impact of such an appointment would depend on where the vacancy occurred as well as who the appointee is.

The Court has only two consistently liberal members, William J. Brennan Jr., who is 70, and Thurgood Marshall, who is 68. Justice Marshall suffered a mild heart attack last summer, and though he has returned to the bench in apparent good health, speculation persists that he may be the first member of the current Court to retire. In any case, because they are in such a minority, the replacement of either of the liberals would not do much to change voting patterns.

But even this first appointment could change the makeup of the Court radically if Mr. Carter were to name a woman or a black. Justice Marshall is the only black in the Court's history.

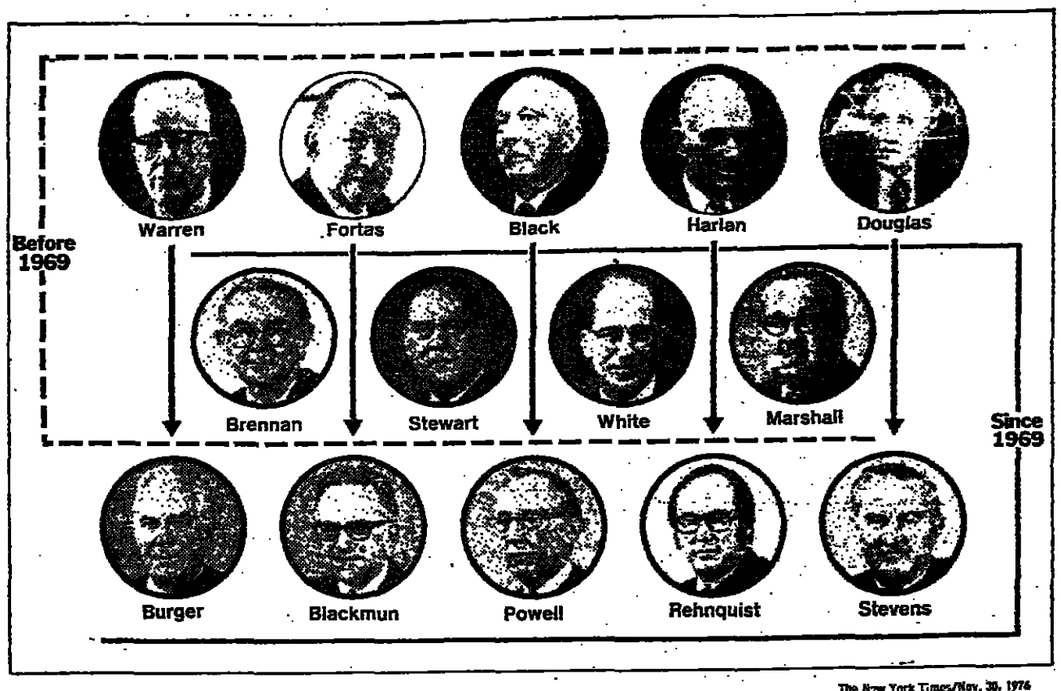
The lower Federal courts offer some choices: Shirley M. Hufstedler of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, a woman, and Wade H. McCree Jr. of the Sixth Circuit and District Judge Leon A. Higginbotham Jr. of Philadelphia, both blacks. Representative Barbara C. Jordan, Democrat of Texas, is another possibility.

Mr. Carter's choice for solicitor general may have a somewhat different effect on the Court. The appointment is important, Professor Freund said, "because of the number and percentage of Government cases in the Supreme Court and the importance of them and the confidence the Court has in him."

If a solicitor general is careful about recommending cases the Court should review, "they're likely to weight the scales in his favor," when they decide which cases to take, Professor Freund said.

Mr. Carter can drastically change the racial and sexual composition of the lower courts as well. Of 97 Court of Appeals judgeships, according to Justice Department figures, two are filled by blacks and one by a woman. Of 398 Federal District Court judgeships, 17 are filled by blacks, 4 by women.

There are three other women Federal judges on "senior" status, meaning they may act as Federal judges but their seats can be filled by someone else. There is, according to these figures, not a black Federal judge in the South.



The New York Times/Nov. 30, 1976

The arrows indicate changes in the Supreme Court since 1969. Chief Justice Brger and Justices Blackmun, Powell and Rehnquist, all appointed by President Nixon on the basis of what he called their "strict constructionist" views, gave the Court a conservative view. Justice Stevens, a Ford appointee, has not changed balance.

U.S. CONSIDERS SUBPOENA OF G.M. MEDICAL RECORDS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 (AP)—The Government will probably subpoena certain employee medical records from the General Motors Corporation if the auto maker does not voluntarily help fill a "critical gap" in information about lead poisoning, a Federal agency head said today.

Dr. John F. Finklea, director of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, said that lead exposure posed a "major health problem" for one million American workers, including 5,000 to 15,000 in battery plants and smelters.

G.M. was asked for the information last Aug. 13 by the agency's Cincinnati office and refused in a letter dated Sept. 20, Mr. Finklea said. He said the matter had been turned over to the general counsel at the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. If the company continues to refuse, he said, "I assume the department will take appropriate legal action."

In Detroit, a G.M. spokesman said: "We felt we needed time to evaluate the type of data they were requesting. It was felt some of the studies we had done were not very conclusive and could be misinterpreted. Once we review our data we will review the N.I.O.S.H. request."

G.M. conducts extensive, regular monitoring for lead exposure in its plants, particularly battery plants, he said.

Blast Shakes Apartment House

An explosion yesterday afternoon, apparently caused by a gas leak, resulted in damage to the first and second floors of an eight-story apartment house at 203 East 74th Street, off Third Avenue. The blast shook the building, but no one was injured and there was no fire.

ımary of Actions by High Court

Special to The New York Times

INGTON, Nov. 29—The Su- ɔurt took the following actions.

COMPUTERS

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit had sustained the judgment by 2-to-1 vote, brushing aside the company's objections regarding the computer program. The dissenting judge, however, had said that where a computer is programmed to produce information specifically for purposes of litigation "a court should not permit a witness to state the results of a computer's operations without having the program available for the scrutiny of opposing counsel and his use on cross-examination." The dissenter also said: "As courts are drawn willy-nilly into the magic world of computerization, it is of utmost importance that appropriate standards be set for the introduction of computerized evidence."

The high court's action today leaves the second circuit's ruling in effect. (Singer Co. v. Perma Research & Development Co., No. 76-509.)

INDIANS

At the request of the Puyallup Tribe of Washington state, the Court agreed to decide whether a state court may adjudicate on-the-reservation treaty fishing rights of a tribe in a dispute involving tribal and nontribal fishermen. The Washington Supreme Court decided the matter against the tribe, finding that the state does have jurisdiction. (Puyallup Tribe Inc. v. Dept. Of Game of Washington, No. 76-423.)

PRISONS

Setting the stage for a major ruling on the rights of prisoners, the Court agreed to review a lower Federal court ruling in a North Carolina case giving an inmates' union certain rights regarding solicitation of new members. Specially, the lower court held that where a state allows inmates to belong to a union, it may not at the same time forbid them to solicit members, via meetings or mail.

The Court said that the state had to give the same rights to the union that it already gave to such groups as Alcoholics Anonymous to send bulk mail to the inmates soliciting new members, and to hold meetings for the purpose of seeking members. The state appealed. (Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners' Labor Union Inc., No. 75-1874.)

With no Justice recording a dissent, the Court refused a request by the American Civil Liberties Union to decide whether a Virginia statute prohibiting oral-genital contact between husband and wife is unconstitutional. (Lovisi v. Zahradnick, No. 76-184).

RACE

Declining a chance to elaborate on the kind of hiring practices that can be ordered or used in efforts to remedy past racial discrimination, the Court refused to hear an appeal by a white Louisiana man who was first promoted to head coach of a high school but almost immediately reduced back to his old job as assistant coach, so that a black could get the head coach job. The school board, in rescinding the original promotion order, acted on the theory that the promotion of a white, when most head coaches in the district were already whites, would violate an existing court-ordered school desegregation plan for the district. The plan had set a three-year goal of obtaining a 50-50 ratio of blacks and whites in various school jobs. (Adcox v. Caddo Parish School Bd., No. 76-296.)

SCHOOLS

The Court declined to review, for what it said was "want of jurisdiction," appeals by Delaware and nine suburban school district's from the sweeping city-suburban school desegregation plan imposed last spring by a lower court in the Wilmington school segregation case. Justice Marshall did not participate. (Delaware State Bd. of Ed. v. Evans, No. 76-416; Newark School Dist. v. Evans, No. 76-474; New Castle-Gunning Bedford School Dist. v. Evans, No. 76-475; Mount Pleasant School Dist. v. Evans, No. 76-499; Marshallton-McKean School Dist. v. Evans, No. 76-500; Claymount School Dist. v. Evans, No. 76-501.)

[News Article, p. 32]

WATERGATE

The Court agreed to hear former President Richard M. Nixon's challenge to the 1974 statute that gave the Government control over Mr. Nixon's Presidential papers and tape recordings. (Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, No. 75-1605).

When Will the Willowbrooks Vanish?

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Willowbrook must be expunged, we all agreed, back when the startling pictures of institutionalized neglect glimmered on the TV screens as a reminder that someone—our government? us?—was packing away thousands of people like tarnished attic fixtures because they were deemed retarded.

So there was Walter, a smiling, strapping adult, asking a visitor last week to come see his new bedroom in a Lefrak City apartment, and proudly showing the pictures of locomotives and Batman, two of his favorite sights, that he had taped in neat patterns about the room.

This and numerous trappings of the noninstitutionalized—dinner for Walter and for his 11 other "family" members from among the retarded simmering aromatically on the stove, the living room stereo playing by great coincidence "The Me Nobody Knows," and a traffic jam snaking slowly outside on the expressway—confirmed the snugness of Walter's new home. Undeniably, it is better than Willowbrook.

But beware, it is dangerous to risk such favorable observations because we all know that the solution of one awful scandal has a way of breeding a new scandal, usually some monster of commerce and profiteering, as with the nursing-home and day-care problems. Barbara Blum, an assistant commissioner of the State Department of Mental Hygiene, is taxed with the massive job of ending Willowbrook, of removing its 2,500 remaining patients and finding more than 200 safe and suitable community residences for many of them, all within the city, by means of contracts with private agencies, and all free of scandal.

The pressures of her job sound immense. Already, justifiably frustrated parents have noted that the state's court agreement to improve the lives of Willowbrook patients is falling behind schedule. They suggest the court should confine top state officials to a Willowbrook ward as a prod. The need to rush is clear, but so are the numerous factors of resistance—finding apartments, satisfying state and city building codes, negotiating leases, overcoming community fears.

There are architects and brokers on the simple level of shelter, judges and lawyers on the civil rights level where each patient's custody is at stake, plus city planning boards and state auditors all required for the attempt to improve the Willowbrook situation.

Mrs. Blum figures she should be opening new "hostels," each suitable for about 10 patients plus around-the-clock professionals, at the rate of about five a month in the city for the next four and a half years to meet the court deadline of May, 1981 for solving the problem. Of the 250 apartments or other family settings she needs, 17 are open and 30 more are "in the pipeline." So there are 200 to go—one or more in each major neighborhood in the city, for which Mrs. Blum already has prepared special census studies to answer questions of "Why here?" Apartments, single-family homes, and old convents are being used.

Willowbrook is so expensive—costing an average of more than $30,000 per patient annually—that the solution, even with sleep-in professionals at the hostels, is economical by comparison. There is a new generation of young professionals avid about the hostel approach, Mrs. Blum notes, exemplified by the relaxed, denim-clad workers at the two Lefrak hostels run by Young Adult Institute.

Mindful of the scandal threat, Mrs. Blum clears leases through the State Facilities Development Corporation. And where a chosen site exceeds market value she says she is careful to state on the record why. For example, she is leasing apartments in Marcus Garvey houses in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section at a slightly higher rent, feeling they are worth it because of the locale and the community need.

In the communities, there has been a strong resistance in some cases, particularly in "high-income, politically powerful" areas, she says. Little Neck, Queens, is remembered for its resistance, but some residents cooperated and a hostel will open there. Community planning boards are more often helpful than not, particularly if there is enough time to explain the program.

There have been anonymous threats reported on one landlord approached by the state, and currently a particular hospital is resisting leasing some of its state-subsidized apartments for a hostel, leaving Mrs. Blum planning state civil rights and housing actions and other officials furious at the hospital executives' advice to seek "other facilities that are currently being used for emotionally and economically disabled persons."

In a way, the more sensational symbol of the Willowbrook scandal—an emaciated, near-naked child curled fetally on a ward floor—is part of the current public education problem. The retarded are distinct from the mentally ill and they are far more adaptable to life situations, including jobs and subway rides for some residents of the Lefrak hostel, than the public suspects. Many of them vote and one woman in the Lefrak group worked in Daniel P. Moynihan's campaign. The more severely retarded will not be placed in hostels, but many hundreds of Willowbrook residents eventually are to live among the very public that demanded something better for them.

Bridge: Texas-California Combine Victor in Reisinger Match

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 29—A powerful Texas-California sextet captured the Reisinger board-a-match team championship here late last night, concluding the Fall National Championships of the American Contract Bridge League.

The winners were Malcolm Brachman and Bob Goldman, both of Dallas; Paul Soloway, Bill Eisenberg and Eddie Kantar, all of Los Angeles, and Mike Passell of Mission Viejo, Calif. They were among the leaders throughout the gruelling three-day event, and put together two good sessions in the final day to win by a board and a half in the field of 15 teams, survivors from an original entry of 120 teams.

Brachman is a 50-year-old oil executive whohas captained and financed top-class teams for several years and has now scored a well-deserved major victory. His partner, Passell, was also winning his first major national team title, although he is currently the most successful player on the tournament trail.

Passell Clinches Trophy

Passell has clinched the 1976 race for the McKenney Trophy, awarded to the player winning the most master points.

The four other players on the winning team are all international stars with many appearances in world championships to their credit.

The final standings were: Brachman team, 51.8; Sam Stayman and Matt Granovetter, both New York; Bob Lipsitz, Potomac, Md., and Steve Parker, Gaithersburg, Md., 50.3; Edgar Kaplan, New York; Norman Kay, Narberth, Pa.; Harlow Lewis, Wynnewood, Pa., and Peter Pender, San Francisco, 49.4; Jim Hooker, Bob Wolff and Jim Jacoby, all of Dallas; Bobby Nail, Houston, and Mike and Kerri Shuman, Los Angeles, 48.4.

The defending champions, headed by Ira Rubin of Paramus, N.J., ended in a tie for 11th. Other New York experts contesting the final were: Peter Weichsel and Alan Sontag, sixth, with 45.3; Bob Ryder and Dick Celler, seventh, with 44.3; Jim Hilton and Jerry Shakofsky, eighth, with 43.6; Paul Heitner and John Lowenthal, 13th, with 40.3; Kathie Wei, 14th, with 39.0.

West led the club three.

In board-a-match play overtricks are a vital part of the game. The captain of the winning team thus had an interesting psychological problem to solve on the diagramed deal. He sat South, and had to bid in the face of some active opponents.

West Bids One Heart

West opened one heart, and East responded one no-trump—obviously lacking the values for any response, but hoping to talk the opponents out of something. Brachman showed a very powerful hand by doubling and then bidding two no-trump. Obviously, he could have supported spades, but he fancied his chances of making as many tricks in no-trump as could be managed in spades.

West led the club three, and Brachman captured the queen with the king. It was clear to him that the points did not add up: With 26 high-card points in sight, West could not have a genuine opening and East a genuine response. Brachman concluded correctly that East was the villain, and that West must have all remaining high cards, including the spade queen.

He therefore laid down the A-K of spades, spurning the normal finesse, and successfully collected the queen. All the defense could take was two aces, and the score was 460, just enough to win the board.

In the replay, the contract was, predicatably, four spades. Again there were two aces to lose, and as West had opened the bidding, the declarer was again able to draw the right inference about the spade queen, this time without the confusion generated by East's venture into the auction.

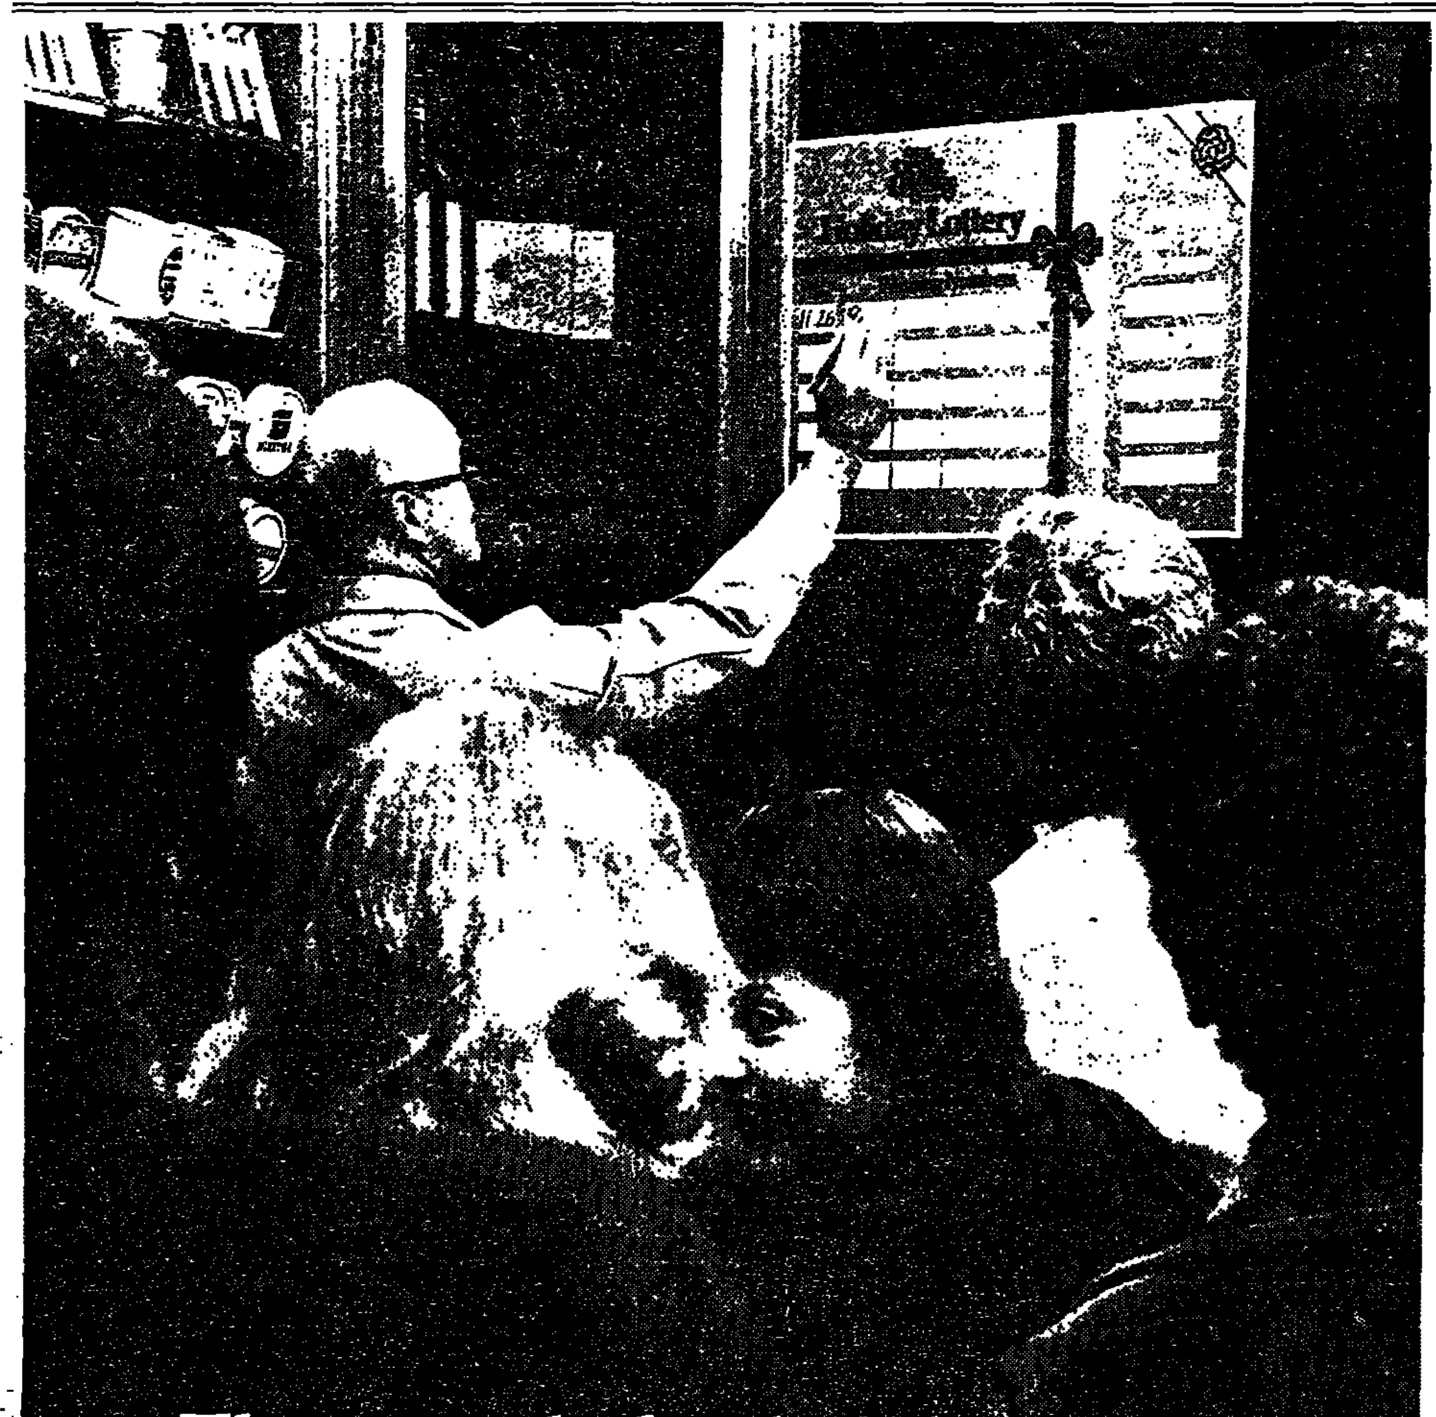
Weekend
Friday in The New York Times



This year, the big holiday games won't all be played on the football field.

This year there's an entirely new kind of holiday game. The Empire Stakes Holiday Lottery.

It's a game anyone can play, and anyone can win. The top prize is $980,000, and there are plenty of other prizes too.

There Are Two Parts To The Game.

On the left side of each ticket is the Holiday Lottery, with two 3-digit "Holiday" numbers. Every week, four 3-digit numbers will be drawn. If one of the 3-digit numbers on your ticket matches exactly any of the 3-digit numbers drawn for the date on your ticket, you win $20. If both numbers match exactly any of the 3-digit numbers drawn for the date on your ticket, you win $3,000.

On the right side of each ticket is the Colossal Year-End Bonus, with a 6-digit "Payback" number. Every week, one 6-digit number will be drawn. If the Payback number on your ticket matches exactly the 6-digit number drawn for the date on your ticket, you qualify for the Colossal Year-End Bonus Drawing where you'll compete for your share of a $1.4 million pot. The top prize will be $980,000, with the other $420,000 divided equally among all other eligible winning ticketholders.

THE EMPIRE STAKES NEW YORK'S LOTTERY

Where To Find The Winning Numbers.

Following each weekly drawing, the numbers drawn will be announced in the press and other media.

And, like all big holiday games, there'll be a scoreboard. Where Lottery Agents will post the winning numbers every week.

One of them could be yours.

So don't sit on the sidelines. Play the biggest holiday game of them all. The Empire Stakes Holiday Lottery.

Instant Tickets Are Still On Sale.

Tickets for the Empire Stakes Instant Lottery will be on sale until December 21st. There are still plenty of Jackpot scrolls, grocery prize winners and other large cash prize winners waiting to be picked up. And more instant millionaires will be chosen soon. Play the Instant Lottery, and the next millionaire might very well be you.

Where no one has a better chance than you.

700 Speechless Writers

By ANATOLE BROYARD

SELF-PORTRAIT: BOOK PEOPLE PICTURE THEMSELVES. From the collection of Burt Britton. 271 pages. Illustrated. Random House. $12.50, hardcover; $5.95 paper.

In the bowels of the Strand Bookstore in lower Manhattan, at the deep end of the basement, a heavy rope stretches across the aisle. It is not clear whether the purpose of this hawser is to keep the public out or to keep Burt Britton in, for if he once emerges, he is capable of pulling down all the shelves and discoursing, more or less simultaneously, on every book in the place. As manager of the store and keeper of its arcana, Mr. Britton seems to have met, over the years, a good many people concerned with books as they pursue, like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, volumes that have criminally been allowed to go out of print.

It is Mr. Britton's idiosyncrasy on such occasions to ask anyone he likes or admires to do an impromptu self-portrait, a visual, not a verbal one. With an absence of paranoia that is truly remarkable, hundreds of them have complied, and you can see the results in "Self-Portrait."

If a writer is interviewed in words, the portrait of himself that emerges is predictably distorted. When he holds the mirror up to his own nature, it is a bit like asking "Mirror, mirror, on the wall, who's the fairest of them all?" Here, the writer is in his element: We see him through his dream censor, as it were. He creates a character, prepares "a face to meet the faces that you meet," substitutes art for the unconscious.

But ask him to draw his portrait and perhaps—perhaps—you will draw him out. Unfamiliar with the subterfuges of another form, he may betray himself, may inscribe on the page the ultimate graffito of his self. Clumsiness is a great discloser and most of these people have forgotten, in their chosen disciplines, how to be clumsy.

Hard to Generalize

What do we find, then, in "Self-Portrait"? It is not easy to say: You may have to see for yourself. One can make very few generalizations, such as: The portraits may superficially be characterized as literal or figurative; smiling, impassive, or haggard with consciousness. Some are talented drawings and others would not do credit to a 5-year-old. One writer will apologize for his drawing in a few added words and another will append a sententious motto or quotation. Some of the most accomplished writers seem glad for the opportunity to be simple, candid and affectionate. Quite a few contributors have hyperbolical things to say about Mr. Britton, as if they thought that, down here in the cellar, behind the rope, it is safe to admit that they simply cannot help liking someone, even if it is a weakness.

A few individual instances: Bernard Malamud draws Calvin Coolidge's profile and signs his own name. Saul Bellow draws Everyman's profile and signs his name. Ralph Ellison draws himself in a tie and tab collar, inside a frame. Jean Stafford draws a quarter horse she used to ride. William Gass is disheveled, his hair down, to a degree you'll never see in print. Harold Brodkey has blind eyes, like a Greek statue, as if wrote out of memory. William Gaddis is headless, his privacy either inviolable or inaccessible to him. Eudora Welty's portrait is charming and Katherine Anne Porter's startlingly sly and unkempt.

Convoluted shells and mazes are popular, but not as common as stick figures and balloon heads. Only Sandra Hochman, Ingrid Benjis, Kathleen Fraser and Tomi Ungerer have done explicitly sexy drawings. Some writers decline the challenge and depict themselves in words. Others must have had their children in tow, for the drawings are by them. Rosie Blake sees her name, or identity, as her backbone. Robert Lowell offered six almost invisible versions.

Norman Mailer, one of the least abstract persons in the world, represents himself by an abstraction. Robert Penn Warren wears an expression of reluctant pessimism. Janet Flanner, a wonderfully ascerbic observer, chooses a Christmas tree as her surrogate.

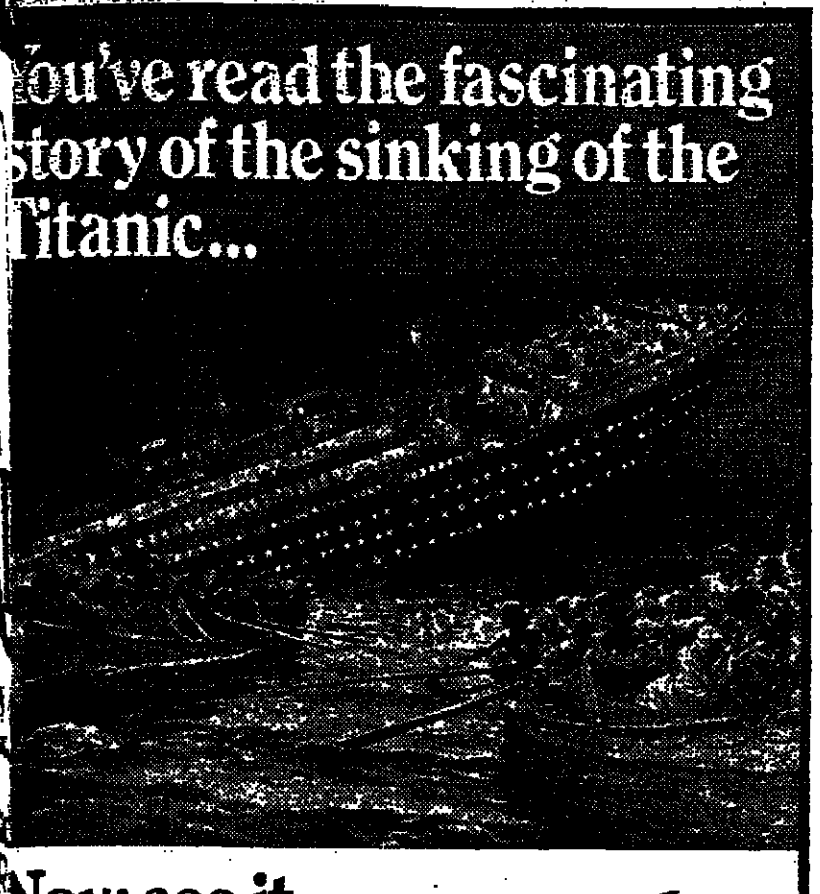
Feelings of Domesticity

Some authors fill the whole space, while others crowd in a corner or huddle in the center. Some take two sheets of paper. Typewriters figure rather unimaginatively in a number of portraits. Joyce Carol Oates and Lois Gould are romantic and pretty. Several authors depict their families as well as themselves: among these, Peter Taylor's drawing carries the most comfortable feeling of domesticity.

Flipping through "Self-Portrait," one gets the impression that few of its contributors are particularly quick thinkers in this medium. The metaphors or metonymies are generally obvious. Those who can draw well often seem to do straight portraits; those who cannot, instead of finding witty symbols within the reach of their pencil, have good naturedly scrawled what looks like the first, or second, thing to come to mind.

The moral? Again, it is hard to say. Writers are easy-going and giving, at least when they are in a bookstore with Burt Britton? They are willing to take chances, even make fools of themselves, so long as it is in another medium? One could probably feed these 700 portraits into a computer and come out with a composite picture, but that would defeat the whole purpose of the book, which may be, after all, an obeisance to innocence, a holiday from high seriousness or the most high-powered halloween party ever put together.

You've read the fascinating story of the sinking of the Titanic...



Now see it.

The New York Times called Walter Lord's A Night to Remember, "one of the most exciting books of this or any other year" when it was published over two decades ago.

Now it is more so. This classic account of the Titanic tragedy is published for the first time in a lavishly illustrated edition. Every vivid moment of the incredible story takes on new meaning as you see the building of the Titanic...her deck plans...pictures of the staterooms and lounges, passengers and crew...the arrival of the survivors in New York...and the aftermath.

An enthralling story is now made unforgettable.

The Giants' Triangle

Hostility between the Soviet Union and China and their armed confrontation along a 4,500-mile border stimulated both countries to seek better relations with the United States after the Ussuri River clashes in 1969. Speculation about a possible reversal of this trend is natural now that Moscow, since the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, has been openly seeking a rapprochement with Peking. The national interest of both countries in avoiding nuclear war has convinced some policy-makers in Washington that Soviet-Chinese rapprochement is likely and, in fact, may already be under way.

Serious American concern would be justified if there were a prospect of an aggressive Soviet-Chinese alliance and reconstitution of a monolithic world Communist bloc as existed prior to the Yugoslav and Chinese breaks with the Soviet Communist Party. But few analysts expect that. What is projected at most is normalization of relations between China and the Soviet Union, something Moscow probably could achieve quickly if it were prepared to defuse the tense border situation by thinning out and pulling back its half-million troops there. But, so far, the Soviet Union has refused to make such concessions in advance of negotiation—as demanded by China—and a Soviet emissary in Peking has been unable even to get border talks started.

The best policy for the United States at this point is to continue its efforts to improve American relations with both China and Russia. The triangular relationship is likely to continue even in case of a thaw in Sino-Soviet relations. Washington should continue to reject Chinese arguments that the United States must have bad relations with Moscow if it is to improve relations with Peking.

The Soviet Union undoubtedly is more of a potential threat to the United States than is China. But a possible Soviet-Chinese rapprochement cannot be averted by frantic wooing of Peking through such moves as abandoning Taiwan or selling sophisticated conventional arms to China. The first is unlikely to win large or lasting Chinese gratitude. The second could sour Soviet-American relations without significantly reducing Soviet military superiority over China.

An improvement in relations with Moscow that permitted Chinese officials to sit down in the same forum as the Russians might bring China into some disarmament negotiations and ultimately open the way for four-power Chinese-Soviet-American-Japanese talks to stabilize East Asia and, especially, to avoid another conflict on the Korean peninsula. In the meantime, there is no reason to delay efforts at attaining a second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) with Moscow.

Much as the Soviet Union and China improve relations with each other, their territorial and ideological conflicts are likely to dictate mutual wariness and a need for good relations with the United States. This calls for astute American diplomacy to make the triangular relationship a key factor in the preservation of peace.

The disclosures of profiteering and callous dispensing of shoddy if not dangerous medical services by New York's Medicaid mills leave no doubt that legislative controls are urgently needed. State and city health authorities agree that the regulatory provisions proposed by Assemblyman Alan G. Hevesi should provide a foundation for reform of an intolerably corrupt business that thrives on exploitation of the poor, the sick and the elderly.

Central to these reforms is a system of licensing and periodic review of the medical facilities and full disclosure of their ownership and administration. Any effective law must put a stop to the present unconscionable process by which avaricious entrepreneurs establish the mills first and then enter into profit-sharing agreements with physicians who provide the patients.

We agree, however, with the caution voiced by Dr. Thomas A. Travers, director of ambulatory care services for the City Health Department, that any such legislation must firmly fix the areas of responsibility in order to prevent the emergence of a by now all-too-familiar no man's land between city and state regulations that provides a safe haven for exploiters.

Existing abuses clearly make it necessary, as Mr. Hevesi described the intent of his bill, to "put the mills into the law." Yet that very term ought to put the spotlight on a more fundamental issue. The present delivery of essential health services to the poverty sector in a manner that makes it necessary to provide a legal framework for Medicaid "mills" underscores what is wrong with medicine in urban slums.

The lack of adequate professional services has opened the field wide to exploiters with and without medical credentials. Nothing short of a more equitable distribution of those professional services is likely to solve the problem that has attracted the fly-by-night operators in the first place.

Double-Tracked Scars

In a letter published on this page today, a correspondent calls attention to a few of the many glaring defects in planning and construction of the Interstate Highway System. It still may not be too late to correct at least some of the system's obvious deficiencies in safety and beauty, and to insure against their replication in the 10 percent of planned superhighways that, presumably, are still to come.

In siting the highway network, the engineers often failed to take humanity into account. In far too many instances these roads were planned to run through the heart of urban areas, irrespective of the human damage they would do in smashing homes, in dividing neighborhoods, in ignoring community values. But it is not only in cities that the superhighways have taken their toll.

As they bulldozed their way through forested or agricultural areas as well, the interstates in many cases revealed the engineers' insensitivity to the contours or to the nature of the land through which they passed. The familiar two long strips of concrete, separated either by a minimally-sized median or flat, treeless grass mall reminiscent of a cemetery, have unnecessarily created miles of hideous and lasting open wounds across the countryside.

It still should be possible in many cases to plant trees and shrubbery as safety features, to mask oncoming headlights no less than to relieve the deadly monotony of sterile grass medians. And for those roads still to be built in rural areas, the designers can leave natural growth and rock outcroppings conforming to the contours, as has been done along some of the nation's superhighways but sadly and strangely omitted in so many or the others.

Reviewing the Budget

Perhaps spurred by the Charter implementation hearings, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer and Majority Leader Thomas J. Cuite have finally moved to establish a new legislative Office of Budget Review, mandated under the Charter reforms enacted last fall.

It is not yet clear whether the city's legislative leaders are prepared seriously to help balance the budget or whether they are out to break it with another patronage boondoggle. Initial plans reportedly envision an 80-member review staff, headed by a $50,000-a-year director, with a total budget that could run as high as $4.5 million a year.

That is not what the Charter Revision Commission had in mind when it proposed the new office, which is urgently needed to help the Council and the Board of Estimate review the budget responsibly and effectively. The commission had originally suggested a $1 million budget for the review staff, but even that figure ought to be scaled down in response to the fiscal crisis. City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin believes that a staff of 20 is adequate, with a total budget of about $750,000.

The key question is not size but quality of the staff. The Council already has an authorized staff of 15 assigned to budget matters. But past performance shows clearly that the Council is not getting its money's worth.

The legislative leadership appears to recognize this deficiency. A Council-Board of Estimate screening committee has advertised for a new professional director and is reportedly seeking advice from expert individuals and organizations. Public confidence in their ultimate choice would be enhanced if they would follow the suggestions of Councilmen Henry J. Stern and Robert F. Wagner Jr. to name a screening panel outside of politics, including academic experts from local universities.

A respected, independent director with a relatively small staff of specialists, possibly reinforced by executives on loan from local financial institutions with the support of foundation and Federal grants, could provide a solid, credible base for the municipal budget process.

Changing the Guard

In the last week, changes in ownership were announced for three famous journals in the English-speaking world. These changes were hopeful auguries, for in each instance fresh financial strength was brought to the aid of publications whose existence has been threatened by real or potential deficits.

The London Observer, published every Sunday as one of Britain's "quality" newspapers, has long been admired on both sides of the Atlantic for good writing, incisive commentary and broad coverage of political and cultural events. But the paper has found itself in an increasingly difficult position because of the pressures of inflation and tough competition from its rivals, The Sunday Times and The Sunday Telegraph.

The survival of The Observer and the preservation of its high standards have been due to the enlightened leadership of its publisher, David Astor, and the trust arrangement which was established to guard the paper's character and independence. Since the Astor family fortune originally derived from the United States, it is fitting that it is an American who has now stepped forward to cope with the paper's financial crisis. Robert O. Anderson is a highly successful businessman with wide-ranging interests in the arts, the environment and communications. Like David Astor before him, he recognizes that the ownership of The Observer is not only a business venture but also a public trust.

Rupert Murdoch, the enterprising Australian publisher who already owns two of London's mass-circulation papers, was until recently a prospective bidder for The Observer. He has instead purchased The New York Post, which is our nation's oldest continuously published daily newspaper. It dates back to 1801, making it only a decade younger than the venerable Observer. Although The Post is this city's sole afternoon newspaper, most evening papers now encounter stiff competition from television for readers' attention and advertisers' revenue. The entry of Mr. Murdoch, publisher of some highly sensational newspapers here and abroad, at least guarantees that The Post will have fresh resources to wage what is always a rugged struggle.

The Nation with its small circulation and tiny amount of advertising is far removed from the world of mass circulation daily journalism. But this weekly journal of opinion has its own inescapable financial problems. Fortunately, Thomas B. Morgan, its new publisher, has the journalistic experience and the access to financial means which should enable him to give this admirable publication renewed vigor.

Letters to the Editor

Interstate Highways: The Tasks Ahead

To the Editor:

The Federal Aid Highway Act of 1956, which will give us 42,500 miles of interstate freeways, has celebrated its twentieth anniversary (news story Nov. 14). Since I have driven on almost every Interstate in the country—some 130,000 miles altogether—several comments may be useful.

First, bless every (well, almost every) mile: Faster and safer, they have revolutionized our driving and our lives. However, the initial decision to let Interstates plow through cities is incomprehenible, as some highwaymen now admit. With the Federal Government picking up 90 percent of the construction tab, few municipalities could refuse such largesse, so in acts of almost total social (and highway) irresponsibility, and at staggering urban and monetary costs, some 47 cities have been torn asunder. As a not inconsequential byproduct, through traffic on urban portions is crowded with local commuters and during rush hours even stopped. By definition these roads are interstate, not intrastate, hence must be unburdened of local demands.

And though the system is approximately 90 percent complete, it still possesses many unsafe spots. Immediate steps should be taken to correct them. First, guard rails must be installed down all medians where opposing lanes are less than 100 feet apart, and the median preferably planted to reduce headlight glare. Second, guard rails must be put up on the leading edges of all piers of overhead bridges (many are not so protected) and on far more curves and drop-offs. Third, emergency telephones should be installed every mile (New York's properly admired Northway has them every half-mile). Telephones can be of critical help. Fourth, commercial signs, now optional, should be phased out: They are affronting, distracting, hence dangerous.

For the future—and to help redeem our enormous investment—we should build a series of bypasses around every city which the Interstate now chews up (and often spits out). A wide sweep would skirt parochial traffic, would markedly ease local air pollution and would let the rest of us get on with our business. In addition, for greater safety, especially in rain or snow, "Trucks Only" segments should be built in densely traveled areas (as in part of the New Jersey Turnpike).

'Unfair to Keynes'

To the Editor:

In your Nov. 21 Week in Review, Paul Lewis comes dangerously close to suggesting that Lord Keynes' "whole approach" to unemployment rests on the assumption of wage rigidity. This claim may be fair to the textbook version of Keynesianism, but it is dreadfully unfair to Keynes.

Wage and price rigidity have nothing intrinsically to do with the possibility of Keynesian unemployment; otherwise it would be impossible to explain the existence of the Keynesian revolution, since many economists before Keynes had attributed the persistence of unemployment to "sticky prices." Keynes' contribution was to show that all that is required for quantity adjustments in product and labor markets is that firms, in the face of incomplete markets and imperfect information, find it rational to make use of quantity signals—current demands—in planning future output.

Lord Keynes (1941)

It was this insight, and not the recognition of "wage rigidity," which set the stage for the escape from the fairy tale of full employment. Unfortunately, many students of economics have not yet gotten the message straight.

The Non-Students

To the Editor:

I am a high school teacher who was assaulted and is still suffering from the effects of that assault. I can hear the tsk-tsk's that accompany any article like that of my colleague, Isabel Byron, "Why I Cried Help!" (Op-Ed Nov. 19). Ms. Byron is a fine teacher, concerned, enthusiastic and involved with her students. I know there are many readers who deplore the conditions under which she, I and many other teachers in New York City are forced to work.

But in a larger context the most deplorable situation is the one in which concerned, enthusiastic and involved students are doomed to the mediocrity of an educational system forced to pander to the demands of an indifferent society: one that mandates an education for every youngster until the age of 21. Our students can remain in school until that age. Many are in school only because they can receive welfare for dependent children until they are 21 as long as they are on the register of a school. No longer is it considered a privilege to receive an education. There is no demand for responsible behavior made on our students as long as they are receiving that education. There is no standard for the kind of acceptable attitudes that must accompany any successful learning experience. I accept the philosophy that demands the total dedication of teachers and administrators, but I wonder why the same demands are not placed on students. Unfortunately in New York City today the Board of Education does not consider authority a necessary adjunct to success in the classroom.

If students do not go to school for education, why go at all? If the money spent on reluctant students were channeled into a system that stressed excellence over mere numbers I believe that more students would receive a quality education, while the few that simply cannot adjust to a school environment could learn special skills through an apprentice system. It is not just the responsibility of the schools to educate. It is everyone's responsibility—labor unions, government agencies and the private business sector.

Unless society does take equal responsibility for them now, the next generation, our posterity so valued by the Founding Fathers when they wrote the Preamble of the Constitution, will inherit chaos and anarchy rather than "domestic tranquility" and "the blessings of liberty" envisioned by them.

Ailing in Soviet Prisons

To the Editor:

The information that follows has been received from Igor Mel'cuk, the distinguished Russian linguist who was dismissed from his position in apparent retaliation for a letter that he had published in The Times.

In response to expressions of concern over his situation, he requests that efforts be made, instead, to arouse protests concerning two other political prisoners.

One of these is Gabriel G. Superfin, a philologist who is in prison for his refusal to cooperate with the K.G.B. during the Yakir-Krasin trial. He is in very poor health, and it is feared that he will not leave prison alive. The second is Sergei A. Kovaljov, an eminent biophysicist who is serving a seven-year sentence, to be followed by three years of exile, in a prison in the far north. He too is reported to be in poor health and in danger of dying in prison. Both prisoners have attempted hunger strikes in protest over savage treatment in prison, but to no avail.

In these, as in many other cases in the Soviet Union and elsewhere in the world, the initial act of repression and imprisonment is an intolerable injustice. The atrocity will only be compounded if imprisonment becomes judicial murder.

Of City Notes

To the Editor:

While considering the constitutional and fiscal implications of the decision by the New York Court of Appeals overthrowing the moratorium on New York City notes, we should not overlook the immense service the court has performed in mandating that our officials must treat the English language with the respect it deserves. Those officials are now on notice that they may not adjust the meaning of words like "faith" and "credit" and the phrase "full faith and credit" to suit their views of current fiscal or political expediency. [Editorial Nov. 23.]

This is no small thing in times when words are wantonly tampered with to define away, now our rights, now our liberties. One is tempted to take heart that we may yet avoid a descent into the Orwellian abyss—or at least postpone it.

EVERETT A. EISENBERG

To the Editor:

The New York Court of Appeals' ruling in the debt moratorium case last week was not that court's finest hour. The court declared in ringing tones that the interests of the city's bondholders are superior to the interests of the city's residents. The court squarely held that, when faced with the choice of maintaining the basic services essential for its survival as a city or paying off its bonds, the city must always (except, perhaps, after a nuclear attack) choose the latter, regardless of the consequences.

This extraordinary result—exalting property over people—is not required by the Constitution or laws of this state, as Judge Cooke's dissent persuasively argues. We, the people of this city and state, must not forget this decision when we next elect judges to the Court of Appeals.

MARSHALL BEIL

To the Editor:

When New York State's highest court told New York City that it must pay back the notes held by individual investors, the very fiscal crisis spawned by the ruling had in it the seeds of a financial rebirth.

It is almost two years since I invested a significant portion of my capital in New York City notes, an investment I made for two reasons: The notes had a handsome, tax-free yield of 9½ percent and as the owner of a large New York-based executive search firm I had a vested interest in the city in which I was born, lived and worked all my life. When the city declared a moratorium on the repayment of the notes last December and reduced the interest to 6 percent, I couldn't have felt more bitter and betrayed. Now that the court has ordered the city to repay the loans (at what interest rate?), I will be faced with the decision of how to reinvest that money.

With the repayment of city obligations now legally secure, and faith in the city's credit renewed, why should I not reinvest my money in city notes if the guaranteed yield were made attractive enough? Why shouldn't the city offer note holders like myself the opportunity to "roll over" their investments and so minimize the amount of aid the city will need from the state and Federal governments to retire the notes and "buy" more time to get its financial base in order?

JERRY FIELDS

Aid to the Heart

To the Editor:

It is unfortunate that Jane Brody's excellent account of the status of coronary bypass surgery [news story Nov. 22] was marred by a misleading headline. Doctors did not "Query Bypass Surgery as Aid to Heart." They, in fact, agreed that it is an effective procedure and the best one currently available for the management of severe heart pain when conventional medical measures fail. Thousands of patients previously crippled by angina pectoris have experienced dramatic and long-lasting relief after bypass surgery. This operation is, in fact, a great "aid to the heart." Whether it will be shown to prolong life or reduce the incidence of subsequent heart attacks is not yet clear because this procedure is still fairly new.

Misunderstood I.R.A. Law

To the Editor:

"Flawed I.R.A. Law," the Nov. 22 letter from Helen N. Rosenberg, demonstrates the widespread and unfortunate confusion in people's minds about their eligibility under the attractive but complex new Federal law on Individual Retirement Accounts. It is simply not true that "availability of the plan rather than participation in it ... determines I.R.A. noneligibility." By declining to participate in their employer's plan, individuals can be eligible for I.R.A. Whether this is their best course of action depends on specific "vesting" arrangements and other provisions of the employer's plan. With the Dec. 31 deadline for opening 1976 I.R.A. plans drawing very close, we urge Miss Rosenberg and others who want accurate information to consult their attorneys, accountants or knowledgeable financial institutions which offer these plans.

Feeling Blue...

By Clark E. Whelton

A few days after the Presidential election, I was approached in the subway by a couple of men who couldn't find the "D" train. As I steered them on their way, one of the men asked in a deep Southern accent: "How do y'all up North feel about having a Georgia boy for President?" I mumbled something noncommittal which didn't seem to satisfy the second man, who said: "Yeah, it must be hard for y'all to see the South back on top again."

"The Civil War is over," I riposted wittily.

"Not down South it isn't," the first man replied, while his friend let out with what might very well have been a rebel yell.

As they disappeared around a corner, I instantly regretted not having informed these two good ol' boys that it wouldn't take much prodding to get me to resurrect the late, great War Between the States. I'm a Civil War buff and a firm partisan of the North. On my bed is a blue Union Army blanket that's been in my family for as long as anyone remembers. Every time I open a book on the Southern Insurrection I fight each battle all over again.

I stand on Little Round Top with the outnumbered 20th Maine as they save the Union at Gettysburg. I nod approvingly as Vicksburg falls. I wince with pain as rebel hordes pour through the disorganized Northern lines at Chickamauga and drive the bluecoats back to Chattanooga. I glow with pride as U. S. Grant comes down from Louisville, relieves Chattanooga, and sweeps the rebs from Missionary Ridge. I even root for the North in "Gone With the Wind."

In the best tradition of winners, however, I have tried not to let my pro-Union partiality show. I kept my Northern consciousness under control during the recent Presidential campaign. I even served my army enlistment in a platoon full of chauvinist Virginians without once refighting Fredericksburg. But enough's enough. With a Georgia boy in the White House, it's beginning to look as if an escalation of Civil War sentiment is at hand.

A publisher is coming out with a paperback called "How to Speak Southern," complete with photographs. of the authors in Confederate uniforms. Among the Southernisms defined in this book are "Etlanna: the city General Sherman burned during the War of Southern Independence," and "Hale: where General Sherman is going for what he did to Etlanna. General Sherman said 'War is Hale,' and he made sure it was."

He sure did. After Chattanooga had been liberated, Grant sent Billy Sherman down to Atlanta to put a stop to secessionist nonsense once and for all. Sherman didn't make many Southern friends as he did the job, and now it's obvious that some of the sore losers have even taken to hanging around New York City and raising a little hale in the subway system. Just in case those crackers believe that a former Etlanna boy in the Oval Office means open season on the North, let me set them straight. There's a whole bunch of bluebellies up here who stand ready to rally around the flag at a moment's notice. How many of us are there? Well, just listen up because "we all" are about to serenade you with Henry Clay Work's hit tune of the 1860's, "Marching Through Georgia." Northerners, are you ready? All together now!

Bring the good old bugle, boys,
We'll sing another song;
Sing it with the spirit
That will start the world along,
Sing it as we used to sing it,
Fifty thousand strong,
While we were marching through Georgia.

Chorus

Hurree! Hurrah! We bring the jubilee!
Hurree! Hurrah! The flag that makes you free!
So we sang this chorus from Atlanta to the sea,
While we were marching through Georgia!

...Feelin' Gray

Following are excerpts from an editorial that appeared recently in The Birmingham News, in Alabama.

The South has never been the favorite section of the country in the minds of people who formerly were referred to here as Yankees. Ironically, as the people in the South are losing a sense of regional chauvinism —along with a fair amount of their accent—the folk above the Mason-Dixon line have a new reason to dislike Southerners.

The Northeast is losing jobs and industry. The Sunbelt is gaining jobs and industry. The Sunbelt includes the South and the Southwest.

So, not long ago congressmen from 16 Northeastern and Midwestern states banded together to fight the trend. They want more tax dollars to be left in their regions and less to go to the Sunbelt. They supported legislation like the amendment to the Clean Air Act of 1970 which would have practically ruled out industrialization of areas where the air is cleaner than in areas already urbanized and developed. They want legislation, which Jimmy Carter supports, to federalize welfare—which would force taxpayers in the Sunbelt to pay for the wasteful, fraud-ridden, self-imposed welfare burdens of places like New York City.

What the Northeast wants, in short, is a second Reconstruction.

Words in politics seldom mean what they are supposed to mean. Reconstruction, imposed by the victorious North at the end of the Civil War, was not meant to rebuild the South. Quite the contrary. Policies were established to keep the South underdeveloped—a region which would supply the industrial North with cheap raw materials and provide a market for Northern industrial goods, but which would have to contend with barriers in trying to establish industry of its own.

Until fairly recent years, the purchaser in Mobile who bought steel made in Birmingham had to pay freight rates as though that steel had been made in Pittsburgh. One set of freight rates—cheap rates—applied to raw materials sent by rail to the North. Another set—expensive rates—applied to manufactured goods sent North.

The Pittsburgh Plus barrier to the development of the South was only one of the many forms of legal discrimination applied against this region.

Such a policy was hardly enlightened, because it created a surplus of poor people in the South and eventually many of those poor people flooded to the North. Some found jobs, but others settled into welfare client status. Generations have come and gone and the North still is burdened with this legacy.

The generosity of the North, particularly that of New York City, toward the migrant poor has been overwhelming. The level of social spending is higher in the Northeast than anywhere else in the country. But so are taxes. And policies like New York City's rent controls are forcing property owners to abandon buildings; large sections of the city have become wastelands, where human dregs find shelter in vandalized, rundown tenements.

The crushing tax burden is one reason why the Northeast is losing businesses and industry. Of the nine Northeastern states, only New Hampshire has not followed policies marked by big spending and high taxes. The unemployment rate for New Hampshire is 4.8 per cent. Unemployment in the other neighboring states ranges from 8.1 per cent in Pennsylvania to 10.8 per cent in Rhode Island.

New York City pays its garbagemen more than most college-educated, middle-class workers in the South earn. Under Mayor John Lindsay, anyone who applied for welfare could get it, no questions asked.

The Northeast has brought economic regression upon itself because of inept and misguided policies.

Now that the South and Southwest are making some economic progress, why should Sunbelt taxpayers bail out the Northeast?

Between the Acts

By Russell Baker

The two-party system seems at the moment to have turned into a what-and-a-half party system. The what party, of course, is the old Democratic Party, but calling it by its old name tells us very little about it. The real question is, What is it?

Even its most august members cannot say right now. This is because it has just been captured by a group of independents with no past performance record worth basing a guess on, and the regulars still don't know what the new crowd plans to do with them.

One thing we can say for sure is that, this not being China, none of them will be thrown into solitary. Hubert Humphrey and Edward Kennedy, two of the more bumptious representatives of the old regime, may find their names unflatteringly written on the Washington equivalent of Chinese wall posters, which are called newspaper columns, but even they will probably be allowed to keep their horses for the spring plowing.

For the rest, all we can say for certain about the Democrats is that most of them will try to improve their positions and stay out of jail. They have long experience in both activities, having pretty much run things in Washington since 1958, the year the Republicans first showed signs of going the way of the giant leather-winged bat.

For Democrats the future is all anticipation. They haven't known what they are since their nervous breakdown in Chicago during the 1968 convention. They are looking forward to Dr. Carter telling them. If he is canny, as a few Presidents of political genius have been, he can give the party a brand-new identity in the next two years. If he isn't, as most Presidents aren't, the Democrats will have to be happy continuing to get elected en masse every two years and quarreling ineffectually about how to deal with the present lackluster situation.

A luckluster situation is a situation in which the Titanic, having hit an iceberg, doesn't sink, but doesn't get unhooked from the iceberg either, with the result that everybody has to get used to being satisfied with staring at the North Atlantic for the next six years. To the Republican halfparty—continuing to call it a party would be to perpetuate a delusion—even a lackluster situation would look like a reasonable facsimile of Paradise just now.

About all the Republican Party can do well any more is run for the Presidency. For the rest, it has a handful of governors left, controls a few state legislatures and, in Congress, shows signs of disappearing into inconsequence. Since its crippling defeat in the 1958 elections it has shriveled progressively—or conservatively, if you prefer—into a kiddie-size party. It has not controlled the Congress in 22 years.

With a Republican President, the halfparty at least has a function. It can help uphold vetoes, which is to say it can keep things from being done. A good case can be made for occasional Government inaction, but no party ever swept to glory by promising, if elected, to do nothing.

Without a Republican President giving them vetoes to uphold, the halfparty is now reduced to the task of simple preservation and heavy prayer that the cops may soon catch a Georgian at the Watergate.

Not all the members are committed even to preservation. Ronald Reagan now talks about a new party structure which might not necessarily retain the "Republican" name. He speaks for the conservatives, and we can suppose that he is talking about a new conservative party.

There are two problems with this idea. The first is that Mr. Reagan, the conservatives' most dynamic figure, will be a bit old to run for President by 1980, while younger conservatives are having a hard time getting elected to anything.

The second is that Dr. Carter is making the sounds of a man threatening to outfit the Democrats with the conservatives' favorite issue—cutting the budget. Can the halfparty be saved by the "moderates," that genteel assortment of losers who followed Nelson Rockefeller until he embraced Barry Goldwater? Nothing is impossible in politics, but this comes close. With Rockefeller gone, the "moderates" have no spirit, no fight, no ideas and no leadership. They consist almost entirely of men who cast no shadow.

Dr. Carter should find it easy work to outfit his new Democratic Party with much of their following. A touch of Eisenhower ambiguity should do the job, and he has already displayed an Eisenhoweresque talent for persuading natural enemies to clasp hands and join him in a nice warm muddle.

How will it all end? It won't, but in the meantime, if we are lucky, we may see the old what-and-a-half-party system give way to two, three or four real parties that might revive American political life. When 47 percent of the voting population casts its ballot for neither party, as happened this month, there have to be a lot of people waiting for something new to turn up.

In spite of what you hear, of course, we are not always lucky.

s a small downtown school with nopolitan enrollment, drawing its students from all over the city. In its environment, there are banks and trendy restaurants, office buildings and parking lots. In no sense does it conform to the stereotype of a beleaguered inner-city school.

The students were prepared for the announcement of Amy's enrollment. Even before the decision had been made they had completed, as a joint effort, a composition on the theme of "Why We Are Pleased" that Amy Carter might be coming to Stevens.

"Amy will like our clean, neat school," it declared. "She can help us learn what is going on in our country and the world.

"Maybe we could visit her at the White House. She will have a beautiful home with maids and fancy food. We hope she will choose our school for her own."

The composition was posted on one of the bulletin boards in the classroom of Verona Meeder, Amy's future teacher. Several of the other bulletin boards were covered with pictures of Amy and her family. Mrs. Meeder and the students all wrote directly to Amy to let her know that she would be welcome.

The teacher, a North Carolinian married to a Methodist minister, told the prospective student: "We have a lot in common being from the South and, most important of all, Christian." She also offered Amy a puppy named "Grits," one of a litter of nine her family's spaniel had "on the same night as your dad's election."

Only Found Out Yesterday

For all the recruitment and discussion, Mrs. Meeder said that neither she nor the students really were convinced that Amy would be enrolling at Stevens until yesterday's announcement.

Most of the children had heard news of the announcement on television and radio broadcasts before coming to school. When they got there, a TV crew was waiting to record their reactions. Their most animated speculation was not with Amy Carter or her father but the Secret Service guards who would accompany her to the fourth grade.

"There will be a lot of changes when she comes," said Chere Ellis, a classmate-elect. "Guards and stuff. They'll be with her wherever she goes." In fact, it is the hope and presumption of the school that the guards will be satisfied to remain outside the classroom. Given the smallness of the school, the security problems it presents would seem to be no different from those that would have been encountered in a private school.

This morning "guards and stuff" were still figments of imagination. Once they evaporated, the class—which mixes third and fourth graders—returned to its routine.

The rise in enrollment that accompanied the opening of the after-school center has recently made it possible for Stevens to hire new teachers with specialties such as science and music. When she visited the school this month, Amy's mother, Rosalynn Carter, made a point of inquiring about science instruction, explaining that it was her daughter's special interest.

She was assured that it would be available; in fact, it had just been added to the curriculum. Jane Harley, a guidance counselor, was careful to explain that this was a result of the school's own efforts to revive itself and not something that had been suddenly dreamed up for a President's daughter.

"I'm glad we started these things before we had any idea that Amy was coming," she said. "We wouldn't want people to think they'd been set up for her."

LEW D. FELDMAN, 70, BOOK DEALER, DEAD

Was Imaginative and Tenacious in Acquiring Rare Works—Founded House of Dieff

Lew D. Feldman, a rare-book dealer for nearly 40 years and head of the House of El Dieff, which he founded, died on Saturday at Doctors Hospital. He was 70 years old and lived at 139 East 63d Street.

Mr. Feldman was an imaginative and tenacious dealer who was willing to back his judgments with great amounts of cash and in the course of his career bought the Chaucer "Canterbury Tales" from the Chatsworth collection for $216,000. It dates from 1455. He bought Robert Herrick's "Poetical Commonplace Book" for $95,200. He also paid what was then a record price for a manuscript when he bid and won for $252,000 half of the manuscript of Caxton's translation of the "Metamorphoses" of Ovid. The other half of the work was at Magdalene College, Cambridge. A hue and cry followed that purchase, however. The feeling was that the two parts belonged together and in England. Through the generosity of Eugene B. Power, an Ann Arbor, Mich. businessman, the missing part of the manuscript was presented to the college. Mr. Feldman turned it over for what he paid for it.

Bought 20th-Century Work

His interest was not limited to antiquarian material. He was equally resolute in acquiring 20th-century literary items. In fact, he was probably the only man who bid on 56 successive items at Sotheby's London while dressed in pajamas, a robe and a raincoat. He had gotten up late and was fearful that he would miss out on the bidding that he simply put on a raincoat and headed for the auction rooms.

Included in the contemporary material Mr. Feldman acquired was the draft autographed manuscript of E. M. Forster's "A Passage to India" and a host of Somerset Maugham books and autograph items. He paid $16,800 for 65 letters sent by Ernest Hemingway to Adriana Ivanich, a close friend from Venice.

One person close to the field said that there was hardly a 20th-century manuscript that did not at one time or another pass through Mr. Feldman's hands. He was there to bid at every auction, that person added. As a result, he was largely instrumental in building the unsurpassed collection at the University of Texas. He also helped enlarge the contents at the Berg Collection of the New York Public Library and the libraries of many private collectors.

Mr. Feldman was born in Hoboken, N.J. on Oct. 3, 1906, and graduated from Boy's High School in Brooklyn. That ended his formal schooling. He served in the Marine Corps in 1927 and 1928 and then became a plant superintendent for various plastics manufacturers. He began collecting books as a young man, but started to think seriously about it when he bought a barrel of books from a Fourth Avenue dealer and sold one for more money than he paid for the lot. In 1937 he started the House of El Dieff, made up from his initials, L. D. F. For many years he business was in Jamaica, Queens before it moved to 139 East 63d Street.

He is survived by two sons, Arnold and Joel. His wife Sally, whom he married in 1927, died in 1972.

William L. Butcher, Banker, Dead; Aided Westchester Industrial Role

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 29—William L. Butcher, retired chairman of the board of the County Trust Company and a major figure in the postwar industrial and corporate development of Westchester County, died today at White Plains Hospital after a short illness. He was 69 years old.

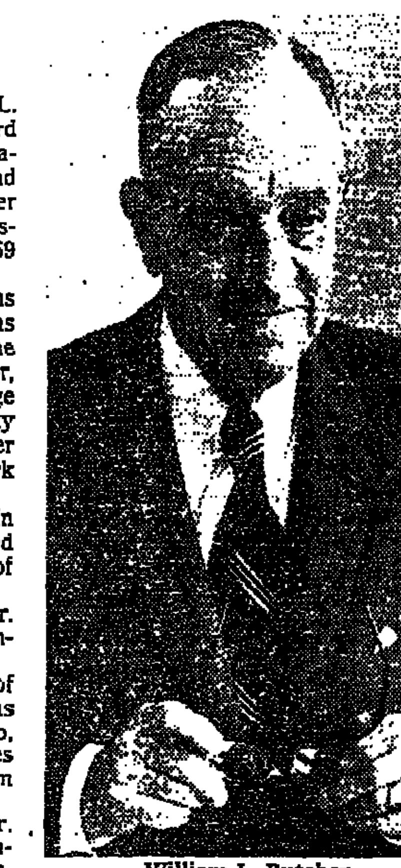
Mr. Butcher, who lived in White Plains after many years in Scarsdale, retired as board chairman in 1972. At that time Nelson A. Rockefeller, then Governor, and 700 others gathered to acknowledge the banker who had helped build County Trust into a state bank. It merged earlier this year with the bank of New York Company.

Mr. Rockefeller praised Mr. Butcher in 1972 as a "practical idealist" who linked his bank's achievements with those of the community.

"The genius of Bill Butcher," Mr. Rockefeller said, "is that he always understood this interdependence."

Dwight Townsend, vice president of County Trust, described Mr. Butcher as a "one-man chamber of commerce who, through contacts, watched for companies considering a move and approached them with his Westchester sales story."

Companies that relocated under Mr. Butcher's urging included the Nestlé Company, the General Foods Corporation, Pepsico and Texaco, according to Herbert Grant, executive vice president of County Trust.



William L. Butcher

A Balance of Commuters

The movement of industry to Westchester transformed the county from a collection of suburban communities to an area of substantial economic development where commuters arriving in the county each morning roughly equal those leaving.

Mr. Butcher, who was the county's most prominent banker, also had major roles in civic, educational and business organizations in the postwar period. He was a trustee of Pace College, which has a campus in Westchester, and a member of the Council of the State University of New York campus at Purchase.

He was appointed in 1965 to the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, served for a short while as chairman of the state's Urban Development Corporation and was a director of the Westchester Medical Development Board, which helped establish the medical center now nearing completion under county control.

Born in Newark, Mr. Butcher spent part of his childhood in lower Manhattan, where his father, a social worker, was director of a newsboys' lodging house. There young Butcher became an enthusiastic checkers player, occasionally stopping in later years at a Times Square checkers place to play with experts.

Began Career in Cincinnati

He attended Poly Prep in Brooklyn, graduated from Williams College in 1928, studied at the University of Cincinnati and began a banking career in that city by joining the Central Trust Company in 1935. He was named vice president of the bank after completing a three-year course at the Stonier Graduate School of Banking at Rutgers University.

One of Mr. Butcher's classmates at Rutgers was Dr. Joseph E. Hughes, later chairman of the board of the County Trust Company, a Westchester bank with eight branches in 1946. Dr. Hughes persuaded Mr. Butcher to join County Trust, where he became president in 1957 and chairman in 1960.

Mr. Butcher's role as a banker extended to the publication of booklets for businessmen considering relocation, most of whom came from New York City. The booklets focused on such factors as the supply of white-collar labor in the county and the availability of transportation, matters that Mr. Butcher had learned would be crucial in moving corporate facilities.

"He made it his business to know how county government worked and of the likelihood of achieving zoning changes, for example," Mr. Grant said.

Expert at Choosing Aides

Mr. Butcher, described by his colleagues as thoughtful and expert at selecting able assistants, was noted for his sense of humor. The night he was honored by Governor Rockefeller, the banker said, "The only gesture I prize more highly than his presence tonight is the privilege of having a joint banking account with him."

Mr. Butcher married Aimee Ruth Tweedy of Brooklyn in 1929. They had three daughters, Gayle (Mrs. Foster Nichols) of Glen Head, L.I.; Lynn (Mrs. Merrell Mays Clark) of Scarsdale and Tweedy (Mrs. Derek L. Tattersall) of North Carolina. Mr. Butcher's first wife died in 1967 and he later married Jane Cox, who, along with his daughters, survives.

In addition, he is survived by three stepchildren, Abigail Ives, Colerta Cox and Thomas H. Cox, as well as a sister, Ruth Reel, and eight grandchildren.

A funeral service will be held 11 A.M. on Wednesday at St. Bartholomew's Church, at Sterling and Prospect Streets in White Plains.

ALBERT CAQUOT

PARIS, Nov. 29 (AP)—Albert Caquot, who invented a stabilized captive balloon that gave French forces superiority in aerial observation in the early stages of World War I, died here yesterday. He was 95.

Mr. Caquot later pioneered the use of reinforced concrete in major public works such as dams and bridges in France.

Benjamin Wright, Educator, Authority On Constitution Law

Benjamin Fletcher Wright, an authority on constitutional law and the fifth president of Smith College, died Sunday at his home in Austin, Tex. He was 76 years old.

Professor Wright, who was active as an educator until last year, was a graduate of the University of Texas and of Harvard University, where he earned his doctorate in 1925.

He was on the faculty of Texas from 1922 to 1926 when he joined the Harvard faculty as an instructor in government and served from 1928 to 1940 as an assistant professor, from 1940 to 1945 as associate professor and as a full professor from 1945 to 1949.

He was chairman of the department of government from 1942 to 1946 and chairman of the committee on general education from 1946 to 1949.

During that period, he was also a member of a Harvard committee, which, in 1945, prepared a report, "General Education in a Free Society."

As chairman of the committee on general education it was his task to put this new curriculum into operation. It required all students to include in their courses studies in the humanities, the social sciences and the natural sciences.

Work in Behavioral Sciences

In 1949, he became the fifth president of Smith College, a position that he held until 1959 when he became a fellow of the Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, Calif.

He returned to the University of Texas in 1960 where he held the post of professor of government until his retirement last year.

Professor Wright was the author of a number of books in his special field, among them "The Merit System in the United States," "American Interpretations of Natural Law," "Consensus and Continuity 1776-1787," and "The Growth of American Constitutional Law."

He was also the editor of "Source Book of American Political Theory" and of a volume entitled "The Federalist."

Professor Wright, who served as an infantryman in World War 1, was the recipient of honorary degrees from Amherst College, the University of Pittsburgh and the American International College.

He was a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and the American Political Science Association.

He leaves a son David, professor of art history at the University of California in Berkeley, a daughter Janet W. Jones, and three grandchildren.

Memorial services are planned at Austin and at Northampton, Mass. at a later date.

J. LOY MALONEY

CHICAGO, Nov. 29 (UPI) — J. Loy Maloney, 85 years old, former managing editor of The Chicago Tribune, died yesterday in Venice, Fla.

The Tribune described him as a "shirt-sleeves editor" who "was a stickler for crisp, clear, accurate writing, and to make sure he got it, he spent long days in the newsroom at The Tribune's 'center desk.'"

In March, 1919, he married Gladys Blackburn in her home town, Winchester, England.

Mr. Maloney moved to Florida in 1968 after his retirement. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Latimer D. Johns of Hershey, Pa., and Mrs. A. Leroy Jenks, the wife of a Navy captain who heads the naval repair facility at Yokosuka, Japan, and four grandchildren.

Eleanor S. Duckett, Taught at Smith

Eleanor Shipley Duckett, a retired professor of classical languages and literature at Smith College, died last Tuesday at a Northampton, Mass., nursing home. She was 96 years old.

Miss Duckett, a native of England, was educated at the University of London, at Cambridge and at Bryn Mawr, where she earned a doctorate.

She was on the faculty of Smith from 1916 until her retirement in 1949, but remained active as a scholar and author.

Among her books were "Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars," for which she won the 1947 Pen and Brush Club Prize for a distinguished work of nonfiction.

Miss Duckett was the author of "Death and Life in the Tenth Century," published in 1967, and of "Medieval Portraits from East and West," published in 1972. One of her works, "Alfred the Great," was the basis for the screen play of a 1969 motion picture, "Alfred the Great." Other books were "Carolingian Portraits" and "Gateway to the Middle Ages."

Since 1962 Miss Duckett had contributed reviews of historical works to the Sunday Book Review of The New York Times.

She leaves a sister, Mary A. Duckett.

Rabbi Philip R. Alstat, Tombs Chaplain, 85

Rabbi Philip R. Alstat, the Jewish chaplain at the Manhattan House of Correction who retired in 1974 after 30 years in that post, died yesterday in Mount Sinai Hospital. He was 85 years old.

He had for the last four decades made his home in the dormitory of the Jewish Theological Seminary, serving as unofficial rabbi to the students.

Rabbi Alstat, who was ordained in 1920 after his graduation from the seminary, came to the United States in 1896 from his native Lithuania. He graduated from City College in 1911 and received a master's degree from Columbia University in 1915.

After a year at Temple Sons of Israel in White Plains, he was at Temple Beth Elhim and Temple Adath Israel of the Grand Concourse in the Bronx. In 1933 he was appointed spiritual leader of Temple B'nai Israel-Sheerith Judah of Washington Heights.

At the Manhattan House of Correction, known as the Tombs, Rabbi Alstat explained to a reporter in 1970 the difference between his role and that of the Department of Corrections:

"My goals are the same as those of the prison authorities—to make better human beings. The only difference is that their means are discipline, security and iron bars. Mine are the spiritual ministrations that operate with the mind and the heart."

When Rabbi Alstat retired four years later, the scars of the 1970 upheaval in the prison were still visible in the chapel. He said the atmosphere had changed greatly, with no tension and "much more cordiality and serenity—if it's possible to have any serenity in a prison."

Rabbi Alstat had also served as chaplain at Jewish Memorial and Sydenham Hospitals and recently at Williams Memorial Residence, operated by the Salvation Army. At his death he was a columnist for Jewish Week, a New York journal.

There are no immediate survivors.

Sidney Laskin, N.Y.U. Professor Of Environmental Medicine, Dies

Sidney Laskin, professor of environmental medicine at New York University, died of a heart attack Sunday at Kennedy International Airport. He was 57 years old and lived in Spring Valley, N.Y.

Professor Laskin, whose specialty was toxicology, was a graduate of Brooklyn College and the University of Rochester. During World War II he was chief of the aerosol unit of the original Manhattan District Project, which developed the first atomic bomb.

He did original work on the effects o nthe human system or urarium oxide and beryllium poisoning.

On the faculty of N.Y.U. since 1951, Professor Laskin was also the director of the university's Laboratory of Inhalation Toxicology. Much of his recent work was in the area of lung cancer and involved the study of radiation, smoking, chromium compounds and alkylating compounds.

He leaves his wife, Laura; two sons, Dr. Steven and Jeffrey; a daughter, Debra; a brother and a sister.

Dr. Samuel Yochelson Dies at 70; An Expert on Criminal Behavior

Dr. Samuel Yochelson, a former Buffalo psychiatrist who, since 1961, had directed research on criminal behavior at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington, died Nov. 12 in St. Louis of a heart attack. He was 70 years old and lived in Chevy Chase, Md.

Dr. Yochelson, a native of Buffalo, graduated from the University of Buffalo, received doctorates in psychology and medicine at Yale, and served residencies in psychiatry and neurology at Montefiore Hospital in New York City and at Rockland State Hospital. During World War II, he was a major in the Army Medical Corps and headed the neuropsychiatric service at Fort Meade, Md.

Dr. Yochelson was the senior author of "The Criminal Personality," of which the first volume was published this year.

He is survived by his wife, the former Kathryn Mersey; a son, John N.; a daughter, Bonnie E. and a brother, Dr. Leon.

Special to The New York Times

ENSACK, Nov. 29—Harry De La r., a lanky 18-year-old military udent who found it difficult to iends or communicate with his ily, was arraigned yesterday in ge of his parents and two young- . A judge then ordered him held psychiatric examination.

ung man is charged with using is father's .22-caliber target pis- ill his 44-year-old father, Harry nother, Mary Jane Greer De La 3, and a brother, Ronald, 15, and ooting and bludgeoning to death rother, Eric, 13.

C. Woodcock, the Bergen County or said Harry Jr. had given a t, but he declined to discuss nt.

ntvale, where the slayings oc- arly yesterday, the Chief of eorge M. Hecker, said that he seen the reported statement but he understood that the youth said in it that he had killed his family.

Mr. Woodcock said his office was trying to determine what might have led to the murders. Investigators are looking into reports that the young man, who wa son holiday leave from The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., had been desperately unhappy at the school but unable to convince his family to allow him to quit.

Eileen Notarangelo, a family friend, said her sons knew the De La Roche boys from participating with them in the Little League and Boy Scouts. "Harry, Jr. had a difficult time making friends," she said. "It's true that everyone would pick on him."

"His parents felt it would be the best thing for him to go to military school, but he just hated it and began rebelling," Mrs. Notarangelo said. "I talked to his mother a couple of weeks ago and she said he was having a difficult time adjusting but that she thought it would take just a little more time."

Mr. and Mrs. De La Roche were active in Little League and scouting activities.

Mr. De La Roche was the manager of a championship team in the Babe Ruth League last season and held a party for team members at his house. He was pictured by a league official as a good manager who was inclined to demand a little more from his sons than from other team players.

The Rev. A. Wayne Schwab, an Episcopal minister active in pastoral counseling, said the young murder suspect, who was a friend of one of his sons, was a "quiet, cooperative, duly conforming type of boy."

'Just a Big Kid'

Mr. Schwab agreed with the evaluation of one county detective who described the young man as "just a big kid, not as mature as some 18-year-olds." Mr. Schwab said he did not believe Mr. De La Roche could be happy in a military school.

Officials at The Citadel describe Mr. De La Roche as an average student during the two and a half months he spent there. Some of the teachers, however, said he began cutting classes in late October, blaming problems at home.

Lieut. Col. Judson Spence, Mr. De La Roche's French teacher, said the student had not been in class since Oct. 28, and when the teacher inquired of other cadets he was told the young man had problems at home and "wasn't expected back."

No Indication of Drinking

Mr. Woodcock said there was no indication that Mr. De La Roche had been drinking when he was questioned by the police.

Mr. De La Roche was apprehended while going through a stop sign at 4 A.M. yesterday and told the police he was on his way to report finding the bodies of his father, mother and youngest brother. He said his other brother, Ronald, was missing.

Mr. Decker, the Montvale Police Chief, said the young man appeared "calm and collected and didn't indicate he was having any problems."

Mr. Woodcock said investigators had determined that the family members had been murdered while they slept, but that Eric had apparently struggled before he was killed. The body of Ronald was found in a metal cabinet in the attic.

The young man has given the police a statement and submitted to a lie-detector test before he was charged with the crimes.

At the bail hearing today, Richard Salkind, an assistant county prosecutor, urged Judge Fred C. Galda to deny the young man bail or else to set bail of $1 million to insure the defendant's appearance at trial.

Judge Galda deferred discussion of bail until a psychiatric evaluation was completed.

A River Park West of Lincoln Sq. Endorsed by City Planning Study

By GLENN FOWLER

The establishment of a new waterfront park along the Hudson River west of Lincoln Square was endorsed yesterday in a study of the area prepared by the Department of City Planning in collaboration with neighborhood groups.

The area is made up of abandoned freight yards of the Penn Central between the Lincoln Towers housing complex and the river. A variety of proposals for improving the 100-acre site are examined in the 90-page planning study. They include the most recent plan, advanced by Donald Trump, the developer who has acquired rights to the railroad yards.

Mr. Trump would build three clusters of high-rise housing for middle-income families along the riverfront between 59th and 72d Streets, leaving the rest of the strip as a park maintained by the developer but open to the public.

The planning study cautions, however, that large-scale residential development of the yards could pose difficult financial problems for the city. While such benefits as jobs in the construction trades would result, the planners warn that the city could incur long-term capital obligations in providing needed services, including street improvements and upgrading of the 72d Street IRT subway station to handle increased traffic.

Devoting the area entirely to a park, while endorsed in principle by the study, is unlikely because of the city's fiscal difficulties. Yet the cost of the new park could be justified on a citywide basis, in the planners' view, because "the present overuse and erosion of Central Park could thereby be relieved."

Mr. Trump disagreed with the conclusion that housing would overload municipal facilities in the Lincoln Square area. In an interview yesterday, he said: "We're trying to bring back middle-class residents to the city. Many of them would walk to work in midtown. In any event, the West Side subway is not heavily used at present."

Mr. Trump's proposal envisions monthly rents of $80 to $85 a room, which presupposes subsidies from the Federal Government, since the city and state are unable to contribute.

The developer, who is also preparing to rebuild the Commodore Hotel into a luxury transient facility and who hopes to persuade the city to build a convention center on other Penn Central railroad yards he has acquired at 34th Street, is the latest of several entrepreneurs to show interest in the Lincoln Square waterfront section.

DelBello Says Lack of Housing Perils Stability

By THOMAS P. RONAN
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 29—County Executive Alfred B. DelBello cautioned today that many middle-class families might be forced to seek housing and employment outside Westchester if the current "pattern" of scarce housing with escalating costs continued in the county.

"The county would then be faced with the prospect of a loss of jobs, growing polarization between the extremes of rich and poor and a decline in the mixture of life styles that have contributed so much to the quality of life in Westchester," he declared.

For Westchester, he said, the downturn in the housing industry represents a serious threat since, without adequate housing, businesses would hesitate to move into or expand in the county and the tax bases of the county and its municipalities would continue to erode.

Mr. DelBello voiced this concern in a message to the County Board of Legislators presenting his administration's 1977 legislative program. This program embodies legislation that he would like to see enacted chiefly on the state and Federal level, which would benefit Westchester County as well as other areas.

He plans to seek the cooperation of the county's state legislators and Congressmen and the state's two United States Senators in pushing bills to implement his proposals. But some of the bills have been introduced before and have failed to pass.

Mr. DelBello's proposals included legislation in the fields of housing, welfare, energy, consumer protection and health.

The high cost of construction and land, restrictive zoning and the cutoff of Federal aid for housing have brought a sharp drop in the number of housing starts in Westchester. Licenses were issued in the 1950's for the construction of more than 6,000 such units, both single-family and multifamily houses, but the number dropped to 1,330 last year.

To help alleviate this problem, Mr. DelBello suggested an amendment to the State Constitution to permit the creation of countywide intermunicipal housing authorities. Currently, he said, there is no centralized countywide authority "to efficiently orchestrate the application process and expenditure of Federal and state housing assistance plans."

He said that the authority could help develop the "areawide plans" favored by Federal authorities, give technical assistance to local governments and coordinate the financing and operation of local housing programs.

Tax Relief for Tenants Urged

The County Executive also suggested other changes in state law to coordinate state, county and local housing programs, to lighten the burden of taxes on locally sponsored housing projects and to give tax relief to tenants similar to that given house owners.

In a section on energy, Mr. DelBello advocated a change in state law to prohibit gas and electric utilities from getting temporary rate increases. He argued that consumers were forced to pay these increases before they were fully justified.

He also said that the utilities should submit with applications for rate increases an estimate of the economic impact they would have on an area and that the Public Service Commission should take this impact into consideration before granting increases.

tion to influence that company's conduct in a way that might be construed as violating laws against the restraint of trade or fair competition.

Donald Schwartz of Reston, Va., a former vice president of Emersons, pleaded guilty to accepting the illegal payments on Oct. 19, when Senator Feldman and his son denied their guilt. Last Tuesday, Senator Feldman tried unsuccessfully to have his indictment dismissed on the ground that the action brought against him by Jonathan L. Goldstein, the United States Attorney for New Jersey, had been politically inspired and contrary to the usual practice of dealing with such payments in the liquor distribution business.

Senator Feldman gave no indication that he intended to resign his legislative the public trust.

"Matty Feldman, State Senator, never met with Schwartz," he said in a statement. "It was Matty Feldman, vice president of Federal Wine and Liquor, who met with him.

"Whether this matter does affect my qualifications to hold public office is a decision to be made by my legislative peers and other New Jersey officials. I am prepared to accept their judgment. Ultimately, the electorate may have a similar opportunity. I am prepared to accept their judgment as well."

In Trenton, Attorney General William F. Hyland said that the state did not intend to file any criminal charges against the Senate President. Under state law, the Senate President serves as Acting Governor when the Governor is out of the state. Mr. Hyland said, however, that there might be a question about Mr. Feldman's right to continue in office.

The State Constitution provides that persons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude are not eligible to be in the Legislature.

Whether commercial bribery of the type to which Mr. Feldman pleaded guilty involves moral turpitude is "under study," Mr. Hyland said.

Employee Suggestions Win Beame Awards

Mayor Beame yesterday presented $22,500 in awards to 23 employees, 16 of them employed by the Transit Authority, for suggestions to improve city operations. "Once again," the Mayor said, "our civil servants have dramatically demonstrated that they stand ready to assist the city by achieving a greater level of productivity, particularly during this difficult period."

Three men received $1,000 awards: Ira F. Kaveler, a Transit Authority assistant electrical engineer, who proposed a communications system as an alternative to leasing telephone lines. This resulted in a savings of $113,000. Max Glauberman, a Tax Department clerk, suggested that receipts for tax payments be issued only on request, saving about $100,000 a year in postage, stationery and clerical time. Chester F. Marczewski, Transit Authority supervisor, proposed to double the life expectancy of subway rails by using a "cold bending" process rather than heat, for an annual saving of $80,000.

Blast Toll Rises to 4

A 29-year-old woman became the fourth person to die of injuries received in last week's explosion and fire at a Long Island, Queens, chewing gum plant. Inez Murray, of Cambria Heights, Queens, died in the Crozer-Chester Burn Center in Chester, Pa., of burns suffered in the Nov. 21 blast at the American Chicle Division of Warner-Lambert Company. Two others flown to Crozer-Chester died last week. Miriam Munoz, 36, of Sunnyside, Queens, died Friday and Ruben Gonzalez, 34, of New York City, died Saturday. Samuel Agyekum, 34, of New York City, died last Monday at Elmhurst General Hospital in Queens.

Citibank Safe Cracked

Burglars chopped their way through the roof of a one-story bank in Fresh Meadows, Queens, over the weekend and then used hammers, chisels and crowbars to hack open a 3-foot-high floor safe containing $4,600. "Crude, but effective," an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation said of the burglary at the Citibank branch at 69-80 188th Street.

The burglars were apparently interrupted before they could attack a second safe when policemen from the 107th Precinct responded to a silent alarm shortly after 3 A.M. yesterday. Minutes after the police left, after having detected nothing amiss, representatives of the Holmes Protection Agency responded and found the locks on the street door jammed with toothpicks. The doors were opened after about 15 minutes, by which time the burglars had fled, leaving behind their hardware.

Torture-Death Sentence

A 19-year-old member of the Savage Skulls street gang in the Bronx was sentenced to 25 years to life in prison for ordering the torture and execution of a retarded man who had testified against him in a robbery trial. Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola said that the defendant, Arcenio Santiago, also known as Robert Soto, of 1055 Sindley Avenue, the Bronx, had been sentenced on his conviction for paying $200 to the Skulls' "gestapo squad" to torture and kill the man, Antonio Gibaldi, 20, in 1974.

The "gestapo squad" lured Mr. Gibaldi to an abandoned building at 744 Fox Street and killed him by pulling out his fingernails with pliers, setting his body afire and strangling him, Mr. Merola said. State Supreme Court Justice Alvin Schoesinger specified that the prison term be served consecutive with two 12½-to-25-year sentences already imposed on Mr. Santiago on separate convictions of rape, sodomy and robbery.

L.I.R.R. Derailment

Thousands of commuters on the Long Island Rail Road were delayed by up to half an hour during last evening's homeward rush when three freight cars derailed on a siding just east of the Mineola station, a spokesman for the carrier reported. He said the accident, which caused no injuries, occurred at about 4 P.M. and interfered with traffic in both directions on the railroad's main line between Jamaica and Hicksville, L. I. The derailment was reported cleared up by 5:30 P.M.

250 Laid-Off Policemen Given Choice, of Sorts, on Returning

By SELWYN RAAB

New York City offered to rehire 250 laid-off police officers yesterday, but attached a Hobson's choice to the offer.

The former policemen were informed that they were eligible for appointment as Correction Department officers. However, Police Department officials said that by accepting jobs as guards in the city's detention prisons, the 250 would apparently waive their rights to reappointment as policemen.

Furthermore, according to the officials, a dismissed policeman who ejects a Correction Department post would also be removed from the "preferred" list for rehiring as a police officer.

"It's Catch-22," said Chief Cornelius J. Behan, the head of personnel for the Police Department. "Whatever choice they make, it seems that they have to forget about ever being police officers again."

Chief Behan said the Civil Service Law compelled a laid-off city employee to accept a comparable job offer or face the permanent loss of preferred status on rehiring lists.

The Correction Department has mailed letters to the 250 laid-off policemen, notifying them of their possible appointments to that department.

"If you decide not to accept a position as a correction officer, your name must be removed from the preferred list as patrolman and you will not again be considered for a correction officer," the letter warned.

Chief Behan said the job offers might be further complicated by the temporary rehiring recently of 250 officers. Through a federally financed program, these officers will have jobs only until July, at which time they face being dismissed again.

"Many of the 250 offered jobs with the Correction Department have these temporary jobs," Chief Behan said. "What do they do—since we have no assurance they'll be kept on either in March or July when the money runs out."

The laid-off officers have been asked to appear for a briefing session Friday at the Police Academy.

New York City Gets Its First Snow of Season

The city received its first dusting of snow yesterday afternoon as a stream of chilly Canadian air moved into the area and sent temperatures tumbling toward the freezing mark.

A forecast of possible snow led the Sanitation Department to call a snow alert for its crews, but with only slight accumulations reported in some outlying districts of the metropolitan area, a department spokesman reported that the alert had turned into a "beautiful dry run for us."

Very cold and blustery weather was forecast by the National Weather Service through tomorrow, with temperatures today peaking at only about 30 degrees and dropping into the teens tonight.

De la Renta's Spring Show All Color, Silk and Flare

The New York Times/Don Hogen Charles

Soft suit is best seller at Oscar de la Renta.

By BERNADINE MORRIS

"I'm tired of seeing women in men's clothes," Oscar de la Renta observed in a quiet moment after his spring show.

It was a presentation marked by an exuberance of color, a rustling of silk and a flamboyance that was generally absent from other highly commended shows.

"It has a vitality all of its own," said Grace Mirabella, editor of Vogue magazine. "There's a sense of entertainment, fun and a free charm you don't find anywhere else."

The vitality was expressed in skirts tiered like those of flamenco dancers, waistlines cinched in and marked by ribbon, and occasionally, ballooning sleeves.

That is, of course, for evening, but daytime clothes also reflect a gentler quality. Typically, a suit had a white linen jacket, about hipbone length, a linen belt and a four-gore, flaring skirt.

"You could wear it with a blouse, of course," Mr. de la Renta pointed out. He showed it without a shirt, open to mid-chest level. Much more devastating that way.

"The mood of fashion is changing," the designer went on. "For the last few years, everything has been sportswear oriented. Women wore pants and jackets tailored like men's. We're moving away from that now.

Big Change Next Fall

"The difference is strongest in evening clothes, but by next fall, I think there will be a big change in day clothes," he said.

Like many other designers, Mr. de la Renta has previously emphasized matte jersey and chiffon evening clothes. Now the stress is on taffetas and other crisp silks that have body and hold their shape.

They're used in fuller silhouettes (the designer describes them as clothes with "more volume"), which are kept in control by a belt at the waistline. The result is a turning away from the rectangular line that has dominated women's clothes for close to two decades and the approach of a more curving hourglass look.

It is, ipso facto, a feminine shape.

"What was most significant in Yves Saint Laurent's collection, to my way of thinking," Mr. de la Renta said, "was that the designer who did trench coats and mannish-tailored suits for women was moving into a thoroughly feminine mood."

He calls his own mood "romantic," adding that "it's fantasy in a sense, but not trashy fantasy."

"Glamorous" is a word he likes and would like to see revived. It represents the move away from strictly utilitarian, practical clothes.

"People have been wearing blazers at night, but they're beginning to change," he said. "Last night, I went to a dinner party and six or eight women were wearing taffeta skirts with cinched waistlines. It's far more amusing and, yes, glamorous, than a blazer and a pair of pants."

Mr. de la Renta believes so strongly in the new mood, he is carrying it out in his other design enterprises. His bed linens, for Cannon, are printed with roses and other nosegays.

His eyeglass frames for American Optical are tinted such shades as pink or mauve. And Miss O, his new line of dresses to sell for under $100, is replete with floral fabric designs and pretty colors.

But it's in his main collection that the frivolity is rampant, from his knee-length play dresses ("something you can throw over a bathing suit") to his rustling, ruffled evening ones.

The play dresses are an example of the designer's openness to new ideas. While the vast majority of other denizens of Seventh Avenue reacted almost in horror to the appearance of short skirts in Paris recently, Mr. de la Renta said calmly that he had designed six for his new collection.

Though he admitted that most of them were in a casual vein, the kind of thing you would run around in at a beach resort or a country club, he said he really didn't care where women would wear them, that dictating wasn't his business. The implication was that if they were worn in the street he wouldn't suffer from cardiac arrest. At the moment it indicated a rare type of freedom on his part, a refusal to be unduly restrained by prevailing patterns of thought.

It is finding a ready response from women who, as Mr. de la Renta supposes, may be tired of running around in men's clothes.

"I feel like a bride," Patty Cisneros told him the other day. A friend from Caracas, Mrs. Cisneros had just spent a heady hour trying on his romantic dresses. "It's like picking out a trousseau—everything looks so pretty," she said. She couldn't wait—she left with one of his tiered taffeta dresses in a box under her arm.

Museums Put Art to Work, From Totes to T-Shirts

The New York Times/Gene Maggio

Clockwise: Metropolitan's hippo toy/pillow, Whitney's Calder tote, Brooklyn's Japanese bag.

By NADINE BROZAN

Hieroglyphics and Egyptian funerary objects, along with Mesapotamian motifs, are moving out of the past and into the present as adornments on shirts, pillows, tote bags and dinnerware.

The trend toward adaptations of art on to commonplace objects is the latest development in the museums' lucrative and expanding business, which once was confined to a trade in reproductions and art reprints.

The latest phase, begun about two years ago, has seen adaptations move from whimsical and low-price wares to more serious and expensive products, such as fine china and jewelry, according to Brian Rushton, head of the Brooklyn Museum's division of publications and marketing services.

"The public has gotten tired of having only reproductions available," Mr. Rushton said, explaining why the museum had recently branched out into the adaptation business. "The feeling that this is overcommercialization, which used to be widespread, is shrinking dramatically."

The Whitney Museum of American Art has done a booming business with items that incorporate designs by Alexander Calder, who died recently.

The collection—a T-shirt, a tote bag, a gift wrap made of fabric, along with the more traditional postcards, note paper and posters—was intended to tie in with the comprehensive "Calder's Universe" exhibition now at the museum. The artist's creations seem particularly appropriate for such treatment, partly because they were intrinsically so joyous and partly because Calder himself worked with such commonplace articles as kitchen utensils, children's toys, wallpaper and airplanes.

Transposing Calder into merchandise proved to be a cultural shock for Doris Palca, head of publications and sales for the museum. "When you work for a museum, you know about catalogues and postcards," Mrs. Palca said. "Then suddenly you find you're in soft goods. Some guy asks how many smalls and extra larges do you want, and you start wondering about shrinkage in the washing machine and polyester blends versus cotton."

The plain white T-shirt embellished with Calder's signature in black, two fanciful acrobats in red and a bird in blue taken from drawings comes in small, medium, large and extra-large sizes and is $5. The canvas tote bag with the same bird and signature on tangerine or yellow canvas is $10.

The Whitney Museum shop, Madison Avenue at 75th Street, is open Tuesday from 11 A.M. to 10 P.M.; Wednesday through Saturday from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M., and Sunday and holidays from noon to 6 P.M. For information, write to the Whitney Museum Sales Desk, 945 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10021.

If the Whitney Museum is concentrating on an artist of this century, the Brooklyn Museum has delved back thousands of years.

For example, its tote bag bears a hieroglyphic inscription from a pair of Egyptian statues of 1400 B.C. The bag, which also carries the name of the museum in English, is made with cream-color lettering on a cocoa background or cocoa lettering on a natural background. It sells for $13.50.

A pocketbook-size tote is based on a design from the back of a Japanese fireman's coat of the Edo period (A.D. 1615 to 1867). The bag, with red letters on a natural background or white on navy, is $8.95.

Ancient writings and symbols are used for a variety of vases, bowls, cachepots, ashtrays, cigarette boxes. Among the most handsome of these is the floral porcelain dinnerware adapted from a Mesopotamian bowl of the 9th century. The set includes a dinner plate at $12, and cup and saucer at $12.50.

The Brooklyn Museum Gallery Shop, 188 Eastern Parkway, is open Wednesday through Saturday from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. and Sunday from noon to 5 P.M. For a catalogue (25 cents) or information, write to the shop.

Ancient Egyptian culture is also the source for one of the most charming gifts sold at the Metropolitan Museum of Art's shop: namely William, a sweet-faced hippopotamus who has come to be regarded as an informal logo for the museum.

In the 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, statues of hippopotamuses were often placed in tombs to impart to the deceased control over monsters and help to hunt successfully in the next world. One of these statues, believed to be 4,000 years old, was acquired in 1917 by the Metropolitan Museum.

William now adorns a tote bag of heavy quilted cotton duck for $22.50. The design is turquoise on a natural ground. He has also been transformed into a stuffed toy or pillow for $22.50. An unstuffed version for sewing and assembling is $12.50.

Bradford Kelleher, who is in charge of publications and reproductions and whose staff chooses items to be made for the shop, said that adaptations accounted for only 1 to 5 percent of the inventory.

An apron, inspired by a Victorian photograph, is just one appealing choice among the adaptations. Made of cotton-polyester and trimmed in lace with a bib bodice and huge sash, it comes in one size and is $18.75.

Scarfs and ties carry an interesting array of patterns. Medallions from Chinese woodblocks of the early 18th century have found their way on to silk-twill ties. ($12.50) or scarfs ($25.)

Americana is represented in needlepoint pillow kits. The museum has taken six floral and two animal designs from a carpet-made in the mid-19th century by a Vermont bride and known as the Caswell carpet. The floral patterns, which are to be done in a basket-weave stitch, are $22.50 a kit; the kitten and puppy patterns, to be done in a chain stitch, are $9.75 each.

The extraordinary gold pieces in last year's "From the Land of the Scythians" Metropolitan exhibition led to a good selection of jewelry that uses designs originally found on shields, daggers and ornaments. A curled panther of Siberian origin from the late seventh and early sixth centuries B.C. makes a striking pendant ($55) or belt buckle ($60) in gold plate on beryllium.

The Metropolitan Museum Art and Book Shop, Fifth Avenue and 82d Street, is open Tuesday from 10 A.M. to 8:45 P.M.; Wednesday through Saturday from 10 A.M. to 4:45 P.M., and Sunday from 11 A.M. to 4:45 P.M. To order by mail or obtain a catalogue ($1), write to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, 255 Gracie Station, New York, N.Y. 10028.

But perhaps you don't have a house. Maybe you're just dreaming about having one, and to that end you've been storing up ideas for years. Well, if you want to try them out, a new book called "Drawing Plans for Your Own Home" will show you how.

The book, by June Curran, covers everything from situating the house on a lot to planning each room. The book also covers remodeling, additions and instructions for drawing exteriors. It's published by McGraw-Hill and costs $9.95.

As long as you've done the plans, maybe you'd like to think about building your own. "From the Ground Up" (Little, Brown; $7.95) will tell you how. Its authors, John N. Cole and Charles Wing, in cooperation with the Shelter Institute of Bath, Me., so well mix their low-key philosophy with practical suggestions that even if you'd never thought of doing it yourself, you may end up wanting to try.

After discussing the time-space uses of a house and the finding of a site, the book zeroes in on the nitty-gritty—from choosing the wood and nails to laying the foundation, framing, putting in the doors and windows, and installing the heating, electricity and plumbing.

The attractively designed book is accompanied by diagrams and sketches. And when you've finished building your house, you may be so proud of it—you'll want to do it in needlepoint.

Artificial Turf Presents Real Problem in N.F.L.

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Rocky Bleier was explaining the problem when it begins to snow on synthetic turf. The Pittsburgh running back, who did better than anyone else in keeping his balance and his speed in the snow at Cincinnati on Sunday, said: "The problem is that Astroturf can't absorb snow. The snow can't go anywhere so it builds up quickly on top. Then the snow sticks to the bottom of your shoes and you have no traction. You have to keep kicking it off."

About Pro Football

The synthetic surfaces, like Astroturf and Tartan, have been praised and cursed for various reasons. With regard to adverse weather conditions they are at their best in rain because they do maintain stability, or traction, and of course there is no mud. But in sleet or snow the traction disappears and they are a definite liability.

Gary Burley, the Bengal defensive end, said: "There was no movement out there, just a lot of standing around, rubbing shoulders with the guy next to you. There was hardly any blocking. Offensive linemen were just shielding people."

Ken Anderson, the Cincinnati quarterback, had Bleier's problem—globs of snow on the bottom of his shoes, which he changed to no avail. Aiming to win the game at the end with a passing attack, Anderson had a terrible time trying to step backward to pass and twice fell down.

The problem could come up again, as winter approaches, and ruin another key game involving a team fighting for the playoffs. Vulnerable contests, to be played on synthetic surfaces where snow is a possibility, are Baltimore at St. Louis on Saturday; Dallas at Philadelphia and New Orleans at New England on Sunday, and St. Louis at the Giants on Dec. 12.

Bill Ford, owner of the Lions, says he intends to rehire Tommy Hudspeth as the Detroit coach. Hudspeth was appointed as interim coach in October to finish out the season, replacing Rick Forzano.

Because he could not move around behind a weak offensive line, the 36-year-old Roman Gabriel is likely to be replaced as the Eagles' quarterback. Gabriel started two games but the coach, Dick Vermeil, has indicated he will go back to Mike Boryla.

Ed Podolak of the Chiefs, who had been injured almost all season, rushed for 127 yards and scored twice against San Diego. The performance provided an offseason goal for Podolak's coach, Paul Wiggins. Podolak, who is 29, has said this will be his last year in pro football and Wiggin hopes to convince him to continue.

Trouble comes in bunches for the Miami Dolphins. They lost a chance to beat Cleveland because Bob Griese, the once impeccable quartrback, made an inexcusable error. Miami had a first down at the Browns' 5-yard line with 25 seconds to play and no timeouts left to stop the clock. On the previous play the officials had stopped the clock to measure for the first down.

So Griese then called a running play and Bob Babich tackled Norm Bulaich at the 3. Time ran out and Cleveland won, 17-13. Griese should have rolled out and passed—for a touchdown if possible and certainly for an incompletion to stop the clock.

He explained. "We alerted the officials we would throw the ball to stop the clock if we got the first down while they were measuring," he said. "But when we got the first down by an inch and they had stopped the clock for the measurement, I got a false sense of security. I forgot the clock would start up again after the measurement. It all boils down to the fact that I blew it."

His coach, Don Shula, did not disagree. "We made a bad call," he said. "I'm sure Bob's upset he did it."

Griese added: "In the past we won close games and made the big play. This year, we're just close."

Pat Haden, the rookie who three games ago suddenly found himself promoted to starting quarterback for the Rams, received a compliment from Hank Stram after Los Angeles beat Stram's Saints, 33-14. "Pat Haden is getting confidence with every game," he said, "and should be very tough by the time the playoffs come."

Csonka Surgery Today; Mullen Has Operation

By MICHAEL KATZ

Brian Kelley is feeling fine, but the Giants' linebacker wonders how long anyone can stay healthy at the House of Wounded Knees.

Kelley started the season with three other Giants as roommates in a Piermont, N.Y., home in Rockland County. Last week, Jack Gregory was placed on the injured reserve list, out for the season with a torn ligament in his right knee.

Yesterday, Tom Mullen underwent a three-and-a-half-hour operation on his right knee, which had torn cruciate and colateral ligaments.

Today, Larry Csonka will undergo a similar operation on his left knee at the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan.

Mullen and Csonka were injured in Sunday's 28-16 victory over the Seattle Seahawks. Mullen, the starting left tackle and perhaps the steadiest performer all season on a shaky offensive line, was operated on by Dr. John Marshall, the Giants' team physician and the director of sports medicine at the Hospital for Special Surgery.

A Rough Year for Mullen

Csonka, the million-dollar fullback, was admitted to the hospital this morning. He had to wait for results of his arthogram, a test in which dye is injected into the knee to give doctors a better X-ray view of what is going on inside. By the time the results came back, Marshall was operating on two other knees and preparing for Mullen's third operation of the year.

"Mullen's doing fine," said Marshall, who performed the operation, which included some grafting of another tendon on the cruciate ligament, with Drs. Joe Fetto, James Ellison and Bruce Reider. "He had a really bad knee, very, very serious. It was just hanging in the breeze."

Marshall said Csonka's operation at noon today would be similar, but that the fullback's knee was not so badly damaged as Mullen's. The doctor said Mullen's chances for full recovery were "very, very good with good luck and hard work," although he might not be "100 percent" by next summer camp. Mullen will remain in the hospital for a week to 10 days and will be in a cast for six weeks and in a brace for the following six weeks.

Csonka's outlook, Marshall said, was at least as optimistic. "No two knees are exactly the same," the doctor said. Even though the same two ligaments are involved, "it's a question of how they tear," the doctor said. Csonka, who was caught in a pile-up with his foot planted in the Astroturf of Giants Stadium while being knocked backward, did not suffer as much ligament damage.

Last week, Gregory had argued against undergoing surgery and Marshall agreed that it was not necessary in this case. He said Mullen and Csonka had sensibly agreed to their operations. But the fullback was not happy. A knee is important to a running back.

"He was scared to death," Marshall said. "If there were any way he did not have to have the operation, he would have taken that option. He had 10 years in the league, he's as strong as a bull and this has never happened to him before." But the doctor said Csonka accepted his fate in good humor. "He wanted to go first, then he wanted a window bed, and he didn't get either," Marshall said.

Mullen, whose 25th birthday is today, has been plagued by injuries since he became the Giants' No. 2 draft choice in 1974. He suffered a shoulder separation that year and needed a postseason operation. The shoulder bothered him again last year and last January he had another operation. Then, while working with weights to regain strength in the right shoulder, Mullen ruptured a blood vessel in his biceps and needed still another operation.

He missed most of the preseason, but until now had been the only regular offensive lineman not to have been sidelined this season.

Coach John McVay said he would be looking for two healthy bodies to add to the roster this week. He doesn't have many.

"We're thinking of looking for another back," the coach said. Csonka, of course, is out for the last two games at Giants Stadium against the Detroit Lions and St. Louis Cardinals. He will be replaced by Marsh White and Larry Watkins.

But White may be needed at halfback, too. Doug Kotar, the regular, played the second half Sunday with a pinched nerve in his neck and Gordon Bell, his replacement, suffered a bruised knee.

The other new Giant, McVay said, would be a lineman, "either offensive or defensive, depending on the best player available."

The chances are it will be a defensive lineman. Jim Trimble, the director of pro personnel, said he had "a good one" in mind. With Gregory out, the Giants have only five defensive linemen while they still have eight offensive linemen.

Solomon Beats Gottfried for S. Africa Title

JOHANNESBURG, Nov. 29 (UPI)—Harold Solomon retained his South African open tennis championship today when he defeated Brian Gottfried, 6-2, 6-7, 6-3, 6-4, in a three-hour, all-American final. It was a rematch of last year's final.

Solomon earned $20,000 for his victory in the Grand Prix event, while Gottfried collected $10,700.

The stocky, dark-haired Marylander slammed home countless winners with his double-fisted backhand.

In the enervating afternoon heat before a capacity crowd of 8,000, the players were reluctant to follow their serves to the net. When Gottfried did, he usually was passed by his accurate-hitting foe.

Warwick Takes India Final

BANGALORE, India, Nov. 29 (AP)—Kim Warwick of Australia won a Grand Prix tennis tournament today, defeating India's Sashi Menon, 6-1, 6-1.

IRVINE, Calif., Nov. 29 (AP)—Bob Lutz downed Peter Fleming, 6-2, 6-4, and won the $6,000 first prize in the Challenge Cup tennis tournament yesterday.

Fleming, who earned $3,000, teamed with Sandy Mayer, a fellow New Jerseyan, to defeat Lutz and Roy Emerson, 6-3, 6-4, in the doubles final.

Benching of Caster, Giammona Reflects Problems Plaguing Jets

By GERALD ESKENAZI

Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., Nov. 29—The last previous time the Jets played in Baltimore they also lost the game. But yesterday they didn't lose a coach as they did then.

Lou Holtz made his presence felt in yesterday's 33-16 loss. He benched his one-time all-pro tight end, Rich Caster, and his starting halfback, Louis Giammona.

Outwardly, Caster was calm today. But not Giammona, a nervous rookie. Caster was singled out by Holtz, who said in a halftime exhortation: "I'm sick and tired of us dropping the ball. Richard Osborne is playing tight end the second half."

And when Giammona fumbled the second time, he went off to the sidelines where Holtz told him, "I'm putting Steve Davis in there."

"Yes, sir," replied Giammona.

Has Dropped 12 Passes

Caster has dropped a dozen passes this season. He is playing out his option. He will be free in two weeks. At least one of his teammates believes that Caster is fed up with New York.

"I'm drained out," Castor admitted. "I wish I hadn't gotten this far into the season without a contract."

But he dismissed the suggestion that the possibility of his leaving had made him nonchalant about catching the ball. He has snared only 29 passes in 11 games (he had none yesterday) and his average is only 12.9 yards a catch. That is four fewer than in his least efficient year previously.

Despite speculation about his future, Caster contends he does not want to leave New York.

"If we can reach an agreement, that's fine with me," he said.

Caster is considered by many observers as the most imposing deep threat among tight ends in the National Football League. But on the Jets, with Joe Namath's top-heavy salary, true stars are paid less than on some other clubs.

That was the reason John Riggins left and it may be the reason Caster leaves, too. The Jets will have to re-evaluate their salary structure after this season if Namath is not returning.

But Caster says it is up to the Jets to meet his demands. That might be just a negotiation attitude, but Caster appears to have a take-it-or-leave-it position.

Confused About His Efforts

He remains confused, though, about his performance this season.

"You never really know how bad it feels to drop passes until it happens to you," he explains. "You can watch other people drop them and talk to them, but when it's you, you don't really understand it. Maybe benching me was for the best."

Giammona carried his guilt on his face. He looked said and he tried to smile as Darrell Austin tousled his hair.

"There was only one other time in my life I felt as bad," said Giammona, normally a bubbly 23-year-old from Utah State who had been the good-natured butt of rookie jokes. "That other time was when we were supposed to play Oklahoma in college and I was kidding around in the airport with the guys and I hurt my knee. I couldn't play. This is the worst I felt as a pro."

Giammona fumbled the kickoff with the Jets trailing by 10-9. The Colts converted the mishap into a touchdown to take a 17-9 edge. Two series later, after Namath had come in with Holtz's hope of exciting the offense, Giammona fumbled again. The Colts converted that error into a field goal for a 20-9 edge and the game turned around for good.

Ironically, Giammona was starting in an all-rookie backfield because Davis had been fumbling too often to suit Holtz.

It is likely this team will wind up with the same number of victories as last year's—three. The New Yorkers have their final games at Shea Stadium against Washington and Cincinnati, and each could decide a playoff spot for the visitors.

There is a difference between this year and last year, though.

"Last year," says Burgess Owens, "we just wanted it to end. We would say things like it's going to change, but we knew it wouldn't. We were fooling ourselves. Now, we have this feeling about next year. We're a very young team."

Coach Dismissed After Rout

After last year's 52-19 loss in Baltimore—the game in which Ed Galigher socked his teammate, Steve Reese—Charlie Winner was dismissed as coach.

Holtz had a bad time last night, but for different reasons. He flew immediately by private plane after the game to Pittsburgh, then drove through a snowstorm to Steubenville, Ohio, to be with his critically ill father-in-law. He drove back through a snowstorm this morning to the airport.

When he arrived in New York, he learned that Osborne would be out for the season with a broken jaw. Ed Taylor and Phil Wise, starting defensive backs, are out for this week at least, as is Howard Satterwhite, a receiver. Austin's status at right guard is uncertain because of his sore neck.

The defensive backfield is down to the minimum of four players and even that number is dependent on the return of Shafer Suggs. If another defensive back is injured, a linebacker, Larry Keller, will play a variation of safety.

Keller was on the defensive line in college, and has only one day's experience as a defensive back. That came last week when the Jets were short of defensive backs for a scrimmage, and put Keller there merely as a body to fill space.

He saw a few minutes of action there yesterday after the injuries. By then the Colts had clinched their second straight playoff spot. Two years ago their record was 2-12.

Owens had a friend on that Baltimore team, who told him, "I'd like to be with you."

"We were supposed to be on the way up then," said Owens. "You never can tell. Maybe what happened to Baltimore can happen to us next year."

Jackson Signs Yankee Contract For Five Years and $2.9 Million

By MURRAY CHASS

Last June, 24 hours after the Yankees engineered a 10-player trade with the Baltimore Orioles, players from the two teams collided in the lobby of a Chicago hotel.

"Tell the man to save some money," Reggie Jackson, then an unsigned Oriole, told a Yankee follower. "I'll be there next year."

Not next year but only five months later, Jackson arrived "there" yesterday, and he gave full credit to "the man," George Steinbrenner, for the decision he made.

"It was like trying to hustle a girl in a bar," the flamboyant Jackson said about Steinbrenner's efforts after he signed a five-year contract with the Yankees said to be worth $2.9 million. "Some clubs offered several hundred thousand dollars more, possibly seven figures more, but the reason I'm a Yankee is that George Steinbrenner outhustled everybody else."

'Big Apple' for Jackson

Jackson, a 30-year-old right fielder who could insure the Yankees' second straight American League pennant, was unveiled at a gala news conference in the Versailles Terrace at the Americana Hotel. The ritual, however, should have taken place in the Imperial Ballroom because it was more a coronation than an unveiling.

First, Neil Walsh, New York City's deputy commissioner of public events, presented Jackson with a "big apple," a red lapel pin in the shape of an apple. Then, Thurman Munson, the Yankee team captain, and Roy White, the team's elder statesman, bestowed on Jackson a Yankee uniform. When White helped Reggie place the blue Yankee cap on his Afro-adorned head, it easily could have been a crown being placed on a king's head.

'Made Me Feel at Home'

The Montreal Expos wanted to make Jackson a king in Canada, but theirs was one of those more lucrative offers he turned down to play for the Yankees. A member of the Expo hierarchy said yesterday their offer would have been worth close to $3 million just for the life of the five-year contract and between $5 million and $6 million (including bonus, annuities and loan) over 20 years.

"We were prepared to give him what he wanted," said the official, who requested anonymity.

What Jackson wanted, though, was in New York. And if he wasn't convinced of that from the beginning, Steinbrenner quickly made him aware of it.

"For a day or so after the draft, I didn't think I would play for the Yankees," said the 6-foot, 200-pound lefthanded slugger, whom Charles O. Finley traded from Oakland to Baltimore last April. "But then Steinbrenner took it on his own to hunt me down. He's like me. He's a little crazy and he's a hustler. I got the feeling I was his personal project to go with the Yankees.

"Before all of this happened, I thought about wanting to play for Philadelphia or Los Angeles, just for the teams and the locations. But those teams didn't want me like this guy did. As well as I was treated by the front office in Baltimore, I didn't feel I had a home there. As well as I got along with the players in Oakland and even though I lived there, I never felt at home. But Steinbrenner made me feel at home."

The Yankees had been interested in Bobby Grich for shortstop, but Steinbrenner really wanted Jackson for his dynamic personality and bat to match.

After the Yankees signed Don Gullett as their first costly free agent, the latest of the mercenary troops by the New York Yankees for all-star army is a 6-foot, 200- left-handed outfielder who d his autobiography last year with positive words: "My name is Reggie Jackson and I am the best in baseball." He may not be the best, but he became one of the richest yesterday when he signed a five-year contract with Yankees for close to $3 million. He thereby joined Catfish Hunter en Holtzman on the Yankee pay- s alumni of the Oakland A's, the that won three championships in this decade before the player be- o disperse during the sport's revolution.

Reginald Martinez Jackson, it een a tempestuous road from rags hes, filled with extremes. For nine he hit more home runs and struck ore times than anybody else on akland club. And he probably ar- more times with the contentious of the team, Charles O. Finley.

He even re- a threatening letter before the World Series and then, surround- agents of the Federal Bureau of igation and his personal body- became the outstanding per- r in the Series.

a result of such adventures and ses, nobody was too surprised Jackson elected to play out his ct after Finley traded him to the ore Orioles last spring. And the season ended in October, no- was surprised when he went to ad of the first class of baseball's free agents—players who had refused to sign contracts and who were "free" under the new rules of the game.

Nor was anybody surprised when the Montreal Expos and San Diego Padres pursued Jackson with offers described as "a king's ransom." Nor was anybody surprised when he chose instead to go with the Yankees to display his talents on the biggest stage in professional sports.

"I can do it all," Jackson once said in his self-assured style. "There are others who hit more consistently or harder, who run faster, field better or throw better. But there's no one who does as many things as well as I do. I can do it all, and I create excitement in a ball park when I walk on the field."

Assertive, confident, independent, he always spoke his mind even during the championship days in Oakland, when he reflected:

"It's become a business with us. We have jobs to do and we do them. We want the money that's there for the winners. I used to dream how good it would be to be Willie Mays or Mickey Mantle. My dreams have died. Even the rotten [World Series] rings aren't what they're supposed to be. I'll buy my own diamonds. I can afford it now. No one gives you anything, you've got to get it for yourself."

Father a Semipro Player

Reggie Jackson was born May 18, 1946, in Wyncote, Pa., one of six children of a couple that divorced while he was still young. Three went to live with the mother; three, including Reggie, lived with the father, a former semipro baseball player who ran a tailor shop.

At Cheltenham High School near Philadelphia, Reggie ran the 100-yard dash in 9.7 seconds, was a star in basketball, played halfback in football, pitched three no-hitters and batted .550 as a senior in baseball.

He won a sports scholarship to Arizona State University, where he again starred in football and baseball until Finley lured him into the pro ranks after his sophomore year in 1966. The lure was a $95,000 bonus. The New York Mets, who had first pick, could have selected him in the amateur draft, but instead took Steve Chilcott, a catcher who injured his shoulder and never made it.

After less than two seasons in the minors, Jackson was promoted to the A's, moved with them from Kansas City to Oakland in 1968, struck out 171 times as a rookie, but hit 29 home runs and was on his way.

He kept striking out and, in fact, led the American League four straight years in missing pitches. But he also

Pitt Is Voted Best in East In Football

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

University of Pittsburgh football players and coaches, who are expected to monopolize this year's postseason honors and subsequent dinner engagements, were notified yesterday that they won the Lambert Trophy, which is awarded each year "for outstanding performance by an Eastern major college football team."

The undefeated and untied Panthers, ranked No. 1 in the nation, concluded their regular season with their 11th victory last Friday by beating Penn State, 24-7. Penn State had won the Lambert Trophy for the last five years. Pittsburgh will play Georgia in the Sugar Bowl, Jan. 1, and if the Panthers win that game they will doubtless be named the mythical national champion by virtue of ranking No. 1 in the final wire service polls.

Johnny Majors, the Pitt head coach, attended the New York Football Writers luncheon at the New York University Club where Henry L. Lambert announced the totally expected unanimous decision by the panel of seven men on the Lambert Trophy selection committee.

Majors Ponders Switching Jobs

Majors accepted the announcement graciously and then said he hoped to make a decision this week on whether to remain at Pittsburgh or accept the head coaching job at Tennessee, his alma mater. Majors has been the prime candidate for the Tennessee football coaching position since Bill Battle was forced to resign 10 days ago.

Bob Woodruff, the director of athletics at Tennessee, went to Pittsburgh last Saturday night and returned to Knoxville with Majors Sunday. The Pitt coach said he spent a short time at the Vols' campus and "I met with the people, Woodruff and other officials."

Majors said, "I will decide later this week. I hope so."

49ers Turn to a Rookie To Save Playoff Hopes

By LEONARD KOPPETT

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 29 — The Minnesota Vikings, already assured of a place in the National Football Conference playoffs, took on the San Francisco 49ers, who were still hoping against hope that their mathematically possible chance might materialize, at Candlestock Park tonight.

Scott Bull, a rookie from Arkansas, started at quarterback for the 49ers instead of Jim Plunkett, who injured a muscle in his side during mid-week practice. Opposing him was the dean of National Football League quarterbacks, Francis Tarkenton.

Through three periods Bull was doing fine directing the 49ers' attack, using mostly running plays. Late in the third quarter the 49ers were leading, 17-16.

The 49ers, havin glost four straight, had a 6-5, won-lost record, but could still finish first in the Western Division if they won all three of their remaining games and the Los Angeles Rams lost their remaining two. The Vikings had clinched first place in the Central Division last week.

The Overland Route

Dedicated to a running game through the philosophy of their rookie coach, Monte Clark, the 49ers scored the first time they had the ball in unusual fashion, moving 51 yards on eight running plays, with Delvin Williams and Wilbur Jackson alternating. Jackson scored from two yards out.

The Vikings tried the same act with Chuck Foreman and Brent McClanahan carrying to a third-and-two on the San Francisco 34. After a Tarkenton pass failed, a 51-yard field goal attempt by Fred Cox failed, also.

Back came the 49ers with aonther ground march, but with fourth down and less than a foot to go on the Viking 8, Clark elected a point-blank field goal—and Steve Mike-Mayer's kick bounced off the right goal post.

On the next sequence, however, Mike Mayer made good on a 45-yard try, and the 49ers led, 10-0.

The Viking answer was a 17-play march, kept alive by a pass interference penalty on the 49er 17, which ended in an 18-yard touchdown pass by Tarkenton to Sammy White. On the next possession, Tarkenton hit Ahmad Rashad for a 47-yard gai. and then found him in the end zone from 8 yards out.

wasn't just money," George Steinbrenner, the Yan- managing general partner, was saying quietly. "He's deep young man. Anybody can sell New York and all I sold him. When we were walking around town eek, a couple of kids came up to him, kids who didn't a dime. And he told me later, 'We can do something ke those kids feel better.' And if we can give those baseball team to brag about, that's important. And starting to get that feeling again."

Then there are the Mets, whose loyalists feel betrayed. When he was asked about the Mets yesterday, Reggie Jackson was polite. "They gave it their best shot," he said, "but I had no personal contact with Mr. [M. Donald] Grant or Joe McDonald." He acknowledged later, "I've never met Joe McDonald." in my life." When he was reminded that he has had a history of distaste for the Mets, he said carefully, "I won't ever knock anybody" but agreed that "the Mets would be a great place for me to go. Joe Rudi and Reggie Jackson, or Gary Matthews and Reggie Jackson would make a big difference in that team with the pitchers they have. Give them 2½ runs a game and they're in every game they play." And finally he confessed that the Mets "never made a serious effort" to sign him.

The Mets contend that they offered "seven figures" for Jackson, but the identity of the seven figures is what's important. The first figure could not be 1, it had to be at least 2.

"And we were most competitive on Matthews," says McDonald, the Mets' general manager, of the former San Francisco Giants' outfielder who signed with the Atlanta Braves two weeks ago. "We started bidding at $1 million and even $1.2 million."

But according to Ed Keating, who handled Gary Matthews's negotiations: "I really don't think the Mets made a sincere effort, their top offer was $500,000 short of what it had to be."

Reggie's Geography Lesson

And so the Yankees signed Reggie Jackson and Don Gullett, while the Mets didn't bother signing any of the free agents. Ten years ago the Mets passed up Reggie Jackson in the draft for Steve Chilcott, a catcher who was injured as a minor-leaguer. The reason, it was whispered then, was that Reggie Jackson was black, a reason the Mets denied. The reason they passed him up this time is that he's too expensive. That the Mets can't deny.

"I didn't come to New York to become a big star," Reggie Jackson was saying now. "I brought my star here."

"But someone said," a newsman suggested, "that you would get lost if you were playing in San Diego or Montreal."

"Fort Knox is in Kentucky," he replied quickly, "but Fort Knox isn't lost. Everybody knows where Fort Knox is."

For the photographers, Reggie Jackson had worn a pinstriped Yankee uniform with "42" on the back. He has worn "9" with the Oakland A's and the Baltimore Orioles but Graig Nettles wore that for the Yankees while leading the American League in homers last season. And when Reggie Jackson put on a Yankee cap for the photographers, his mini-Afro puffed out on each side.

"George Steinbrenner," he was told, "might tell you to cut your hair."

"If he tells me to get it bald," Reggie Jackson said, "I got to consider it."

Losses on Road Of N.B.A. Clubs Affect the 'Line'

By SAM GOLDAPER

Inflation has come to the National Basketball Association betting line. The phenomenon of the inability of teams to win on the road has increased point spreads to as high as 13. Of the 202 games played thus far, home teams have won 75.7 percent.

The most vivid examples are the Portland Trail Blazers, unbeaten in 12 games at home, who are 0-5 on the road, and the Seattle SuperSonics, with a 28-game home winning streak over two seasons, who have lost all eight away games. Of the 22 teams, only the Cleveland Cavaliers are above .500 on the road with a 6-4 won-lost mark.

Jack Joyce, the N.B.A. director of security, who monitors the daily point spreads and keeps records of all the results, reports that the winning road percentage for last season was 33 as compared with 24.3 so far this season.

Why are victories on the road scarcer?

The coaches and general managers interviewed offered varied reasons. Some said the officiating favored home teams. Others said the league was more balanced with the influx of four teams from the defunct American Basketball Association. A few blamed the excessive travel caused by the new scheduling format under which teams are playing one another only four times.

Past Point Spreads Cited

"It's unusual to see 11½ and 12 point spreads," said Joyce. "In previous years point spreads averaged between 3½ and 7½ and if you saw 8, it was a lot."

A Westchester County bookmaker, who is said to do a weekly business of $100,000 in pro basketball, said: "The Milwaukee Bucks are a total disaster, the Atlanta Hawks are always losers on the road and the Washington Bullets, good in previous seasons, are now a joke. Teams coming into places like Denver, New Orleans, Cleveland, Portland, Seattle and San Antonio are almost always automatic losers.

"When the Nets played in Denver,

Canadiens Widen Lead On Brisk Scoring Pace

By PARTON KEESE

While the Islanders' first-place lead was slowly slipping and the Rangers' last-place gap was slowly narrowing, the Montreal Canadiens were making a shambles of the National Hockey League standing. The champions completed a perfect three-game road trip and pulled 17 points ahead of second-place Los Angeles in the terribly unbalanced Norris Division. The other division leaders fell back. The Islanders lost three of four games and saw their Patrick Division margin fall to 5 points over onrushing Philadelphia; the Boston Bruins dropped one of three in the Adams Division as Buffalo pulled to within 12 points with two games in hand, and the St. Louis Blues and Chicago Black Hawks continued their musical-chair act in the weak Smythe Division, with the Blues gaining a 3-point advantage.

About Pro Hockey

The Canadiens suffered no let up in their attack on the N.H.L.'s goal-scoring records. With 17 goals in three games, they brought their total to 134 in 26 games, an average of 5.15, which projects to 412 goals for a season, 13 over the mark set by Boston in 1970-71.

As if this weren't enough, the Stanley Cup holders also regained the lead in defense, a ranking that had been held by the Islanders the last three weeks. Ken Dryden allowed only two goals in two games, and Bunny Larocque gave up three in one to lower their goalies—and team—to 2.23. The Islanders went from 2.11 to 2.35.

Individually, Montreal still dominated the scoring race. Guy Lafleur, last year's scoring champion, tallied four goals and three assists to regain first place from Steve Shutt, his teammate. Lafleur has 21 goals and 23 assist for 44 points, while Shutt, maintaining his goal-a-game pace, has 26 goals and 16 assists for 42 points.

Making assists at better-than-one-a-game were Larry Robinson, a Montreal defenseman, who had 27 in 26 games, and Borje Salming of Toronto, with 23 in 22 games. Robinson had a total of 34 points, fourth on the list behind Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles with 13-23-36, but Salming, also a defenseman, had only two goals.

Individual team leaders were as follows:

Patrick Division—Islanders, Denis Potvin 9-18-27; Flyers, Bobby Clarke 7-18-25; Flames, Eric Vail 12-13-25; Rangers, Rod Gilbert 12-20-32.

Smythe Division—Blues, Bob MacMillan 7-16-23; Black Hawks, Pit Martin 9-16-25; North Stars, Tim Young 11-21-32; Canucks, Mike Walton 4-18-22; Rockies, Wilf Paiement 10-13-23.

Norris Division—Canadiens, Lafleur 21-23-44; Kings, Dionne 13-23-36; Penguins, Rick Kehoe 12-9-21; Red Wings, Walt McKechnie 9-13-22; Capitals, Guy Charron 14-9-23.

Adams Division—Bruins, Peter McNab 19-11-30; Sabres, Rick Martin 12-11-23; Maple Leafs, Darryl Sittler 12-18-30; Barons, Dennis Maruk 11-11-22.

An interesting race is developing in the Patrick Division—where all four teams have scored more goals than their opponents, as opposed to the Smythe where all five teams have had more goals scored against them—with only 10 points separating the Islanders in first (33) and the Rangers in last (23).

A week ago the Rangers were 15 points behind the leaders, but lately, shouts of "J.D.! J.D.!" have been renting the Madison Square Garden air, signifying that defense has returned to the Blue Shirts' style.

"J.D." is John Davidson, the Ranger goaltender, who has allowed only nine goals in his last 19 periods in helping run New York's unbeaten skein to a modest four games.

"We're finally starting to blend together," said Davidson after the Rangers had posted a 4-1 victory over Minnesota Sunday night. "It's a super feeling," he added, admitting the boos had been getting to him earlier in the season.

"When I start losing my confidence, I start going down a lot," he said. "Now I'm trying to stand up more. It's easier to do it when you get more confidence in yourself and more confidence in your teammates."

The Islanders have not had to worry much about their goaltending since Glenn Resch with a 2.05 goals-against average is running neck-and-neck for the league leadership with Gerry Desjardins of Buffalo, who has 2.03. But, after losing, 5-3, to the Flyers Sunday night in Philadelphia, they are more aware of the close pursuit.

"They look like a different team now," Resch said of the Flyers, who regained second place with the triumph. "This game has to give them a big lift, but with so many games left, it can't be that important."

Tonight the Islanders take on Toronto at Nassau Coliseum, where they will get their first look at Mike Palmateer, a rookie netminder with an 8-3-1 won-lost-tied mark.

The Rangers meet the Flames tonight in Atlanta for the first time this season. The game should tell a lot about whether the Ranger defense is a hit or a myth.

But Minnesota's lead remained at 13-10 when Cox's extra-point try was blocked.

But another pass interference penalty, this one against Minnesota, gave the 49ers a shot from the 0e-yard line just 41 seconds before the half ended, and Bull pushed the ball over himself, so that the 49ers went off at halftime leading 17-13.

Some Hidden Goals

The N.F.L.'s ingenious playoff system provided the motivation. The Vikings had a 9-1-1 won-lost-tied record before the game, the best in the conference. If they end the season on Dec. 12 with the best record in the conference, they will be rewarded with a home game for the opening of the playoffs on Dec. 18.

And if they win that first playoff game, they will have the home advantage for the conference championship on Dec. 26. Those were two excellent reasons for them to do their best in the 12th game of the season, the 18th if one counts the exhibitions in the summer.

Hope Still Remains

As for the 49ers, they could still hope. If they beat Minnesota and then San Diego and New Orleans, while the Rams lost their last two games to Atlanta and Detroit, the 49ers would be in the playoffs as Western Division champions.

Furthermore, there was the matter of the boos. San Francisco got off to a 6-1 start this season, the best in years, and the fans began to think in terms of going to the Super Bowl on Jan. 9.

But when the team lost for the fourth time in a row, to the Rams eight days ago, the fans booed and booed. Their targets were the kicker, Steve Mike-Mayer, and the quarterback, Jim Plunkett, a tarnished Bay-area hero.

Against the Rams, whom the 49ers had crushed, 16-0, in an earlier game, the San Francisco passing attack gained a net of only 18 yards.

So the goal against Minnesota was to do well, appease the fans and change some boos to cheers.

Foreman Has Motivation

Also at this time of year, late in the season, individual achievements begin to take shape in terms of statistics, and preseason goals become realistic or unattainable. So there were many individual motivations.

Chuck Foreman, the Vikings' halfback, had caught 50 passes. Before the season Fran Tarkenton had said that Foreman would catch 100. That is unrealistic, but Foreman could wind up with 75, a real accomplishment.

Jackson Signs Yank Pact For 5 Years, $2.9 Million owner had dinner with Munson to solicit his views on how the players would feel about Reggie, whose outspoken nature and large ego often dominate a clubhouse.

"Go get the big man," Munson told his boss. "He's the only guy in baseball who can carry a club for a month. And the h ell with what you hear. He hustles every minute on the field."

Steinbrenner, who can be as charming a person as Jackson is dangerous as a hitter, made his first serious move in Jackson's direction a week ago yesterday when he spent most of the day with Reggie in New York. Breakfast at the Carlyle Hotel, lunch at "21" Club, a stroll around the East Side, a couple of hours at George's apartment.

Then, Steinbrenner flew to Chicago last Wednesday and met with his quarry for an hour and a half, right in the middle of Reggie's most hectic day. For the discussions with the other clubs—San Diego, Montreal, Baltimore—Gary Walker, the agent, and Steve Kay, the lawyer, sat in with Jackson and did much of the negotiating. But Walker and Kay excused themselves when Steinbrenner arrived.

Money Not the Only Thing

"We left them alone," related Walker, who has traveled about 5,000 miles in a motor home in the last couple of weeks. "They're big boys and they were having fun."

Jackson said he didn't make up his mind until last Saturday night, but Walker said they all knew by Wednesday night that Reggie would become a Yankee. Steinbrenner's return trip to Chicago from Culver, Ind., that night and his breakfast meeting with Jackson Thursday morning simply solidified the player's thinking.

"This was the biggest decision I've ever had to make in my life," said the man in the gray flannel suit.

Some people, owners in particular, maintain that players make those big decisions based strictly on money, but Jackson stressed there are factors in life besides money. "Anyway," he said, "I make more money off the field than on the field."

One of the factors in Jackson's life is a desire to establish a retirement home in Arizona for players from the old Negro leagues. He had discussed that with the clubs he negotiated with but didn't make it a prerequisite to signing.

Walker, who also is Reggie's business partner, said the idea of helping support such a home financially wasn't part of the Yankee agreement, but Steinbrenner "was very sympathetic and receptive" to the project.

Messersmith Got Away

Steinbrenner, who has been successful in signing three of the four quality free agents he has pursued in the last two years (he missed on Andy Messersmith), played down his role in winning Jackson's services.

"We really did hit it off," the owner said, "especially on stuff completely unrelated to baseball. But I didn't sell him. New York City did."

Whatever or whoever the salesman was, Catfish Hunter, for one, was elated to hear that his teammate with Oakland now would be his teammate with the Yankees.

"He can be a lot of things," Hunter said from his home in Hertford, N.C., when asked about the stores of Jackson's allegedly divisive influence in a clubhouse, "but he can help a club a lot more than he can ever hurt it. You know he's going to talk a lot but you know he's going to produce a lot along with that talking. Everybody in Oakland respected him because we knew when he got hot, he could knock in enough runs to carry the whole team. If he gets hot at Yankee Stadium, he could hit 60 home runs."

Tempestuous New Yankee

kept hitting the ball over fences; 47 times in his second season alone. By then he was making $40,000, wanted $60,000 but settled for $47,000 plus free rent after his first tiff with Finley. He probably "matured" in 1971 after a winter of playing in Puerto Rico, where his manager, Frank Robinson, observed: "He's trying to do too much."

Then, when he stopped trying to do too much, he seemed to do everything. He led the A's to their first of five straight Western Division titles in 1971, won the pennant in 1972 by stealing home against the Detroit Tigers, tore a leg muscle on the play and sat out the World Series. But a year later, he hit 32 home runs and knocked in 117 runs, became the most valuable player in the league and led the A's to the world title over the Mets.

Now at 30, divorced, he lives in Phoenix, likes foreign cars, once had a license plate "MVP 73" and basks in the life of the nouveau riche. Two years ago, he got a phone call inviting him to golf with President Ford in Arizona. The President shot a 97, Reggie shot a 90 and "took 10 buck off him."

"I invited him to stop by my house any time he was in town," the newest and most outspoken of the wealthy Yankees remembers. "He smiled and said I was welcome at his pad any time, too."

st Saturday night Denver opened over Indiana but the game was off the boards after heavy Indi- oney came in. The new big thing basketball is the under-and-over g. A figure is set on the total the two teams will score and ettor has the option of betting or over."

Havlicek Still Sidelined

e 26 points scored by Mitch Kup- of the Bullets, who is from Brent- , L.I., against the Sonics Sunday was the most by a Washington e since Phil Chenier collected 29 s on Oct. 23, 1971.... John Hav- , the Boston Celtic captain, who nissed only 33 games because of y in his 15-season career, is ex- d to miss at least two more games use of a swollen left knee. Havlicek did not play Saturday night against the Knicks. Coach Tom Heinsohn said Fred Saunders would continue as Havlicek's replacement. "Fred has the same playing style as Hondo," said Heinsohn. "he's fast, shoots well and probably plays tougher than John at this point." . . . Keith Erickson of the Suns will be sidelined three to six weeks after injuring his right knee in practice yesterday. But the Suns got back Alvan Adams, their center, who had been out with a sprained ankle.

The Houston Rockets are the first team in N.B.A. history to win three successive overtime games. They beat Buffalo, Kansas City and Golden State between Nov. 17 and 24. Three other teams had played three successive overtime games. The Fort Wayne Pistons lost all three in 1951, the Rochester Royals were 1-2 in 1962 and the San Francisco Warriors 2-1, also in 1962.... David Thompson of the Nuggets, who scored 127 points in four games last week, has moved into third place in league scoring with a 26.9-point average. Pete Maravich of the Jazz (29.9) and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers (29.3) are ahead of him.... Portland's Bill Walton is the top rebounder (16.6) and first in blocked shots (3.59), Don Buse of the Indiana Pacers is the assist pacesetter (8.5) and leads in steals (3.79). The Trail Blazers are the league's best scoring team (115.9) and the Cavaliers are on top defensively. They have limited the opposition to 96 points a game.

Rutgers Opens On 114-86 Victory

Pitt Voted Lambert Trophy As East's Top College Team

University of Pittsburgh, said last Friday, "It's now down to a decision by Johnny just where he wants to live the rest of his life and where he wants to raise his children."

Majors seemed to agree with Posvar yesterday when he said, "Now is the time for me to settle on what I want for a long career. But it has not always been on my mind to return to Tennessee. It's never been a lifelong ambition of mine to return."

Majors took the head coaching job at Pitt in 1973 after four years as head coach at Iowa State. He turned losing teams into consistent winners each time.

Majors, a native of Tennessee, was an all-America back at Tennessee and finished second in the 1956 Heisman Trophy race to Paul Hornung, the Notre Dame quarterback.

Following yesterday's Lambert announcement Majors flew back to Pittsburgh just long enough to change suits and return to New York this morning for what is expected to be Pitt's second big award. Tony Dorsett, the Panthers' record-setting tailback, will be with Majors today at the Downtown Athletic Club where it is expected that Dorsett will be named winner of the Heisman Trophy as the season's outstanding college player.

Other possible awards for Pitt's expanding trophy case may include the MacArthur Bowl, given each year by the National Football Foundation to its selection of a national champion; the American Football Coaches Association coach of the year award to Majors, and the Maxwell Trophy, an award given by the Maxwell Club of Philadelphia and similar to the Heisman Trophy, to Dorsett.

Dorsett finished making National Collegiate Athletic Association records Friday night because bowl games don't count toward such records. His biggest achievement was to complete a four-year, 44-game varsity career of rushing with the ball for 6,082 yards. He became the only player in college history to run 6,000 yards from scrimmage.

Pittsburgh was the first to win the Lambert Trophy in 1936 and won it again in 1937 with teams led by another famous back, Marshall Goldberg. The undefeated but once tied 1937 Panthers were ranked No. 1 in the nation, also. Pitt last won the Lambert Trophy in 1955 and this is the fourth time the Panthers have taken the top Eastern football award.

Rutgers, which also finished its season undefeated and untied with a 17-9 decision over Colgate last Thursday night, was second in the Lambert Trophy voting. Pitt got all seven first-place votes while the Scarlet Knights received all seven second-place votes in the final ballot. Yale and Brown, which tied for the Ivy League title, finished third and fourth, respectively, followed by Boston College, Penn State, Colgate, Navy, Villanova and Dartmouth.

New York Yacht Club Shrinks 50-Footers to 48

The New York 50 has shrunk. The New York Yacht Club's trend-setting one-design offshore racing class is now the New York 48. The N.Y.Y.C. commodore, Robert McCullough, has announced that 10 yachts will form the nucleus of the new class, with the first ones sailing Long Island Sound this summer.

McCullough said the Sparkman and Stephens design was shortened by two feet as an economy measure. At 48 feet long, it has the same interior, rig and deck layout as the 50, but it has been adapted to the hull mold of the S and S Swan 47. Like the Swan, the 48 is being built by the Nautor Yard in Finland.

The boats, which will cost about $200,000, are the club's answer to combining offshore racing and cruising in a stable class.

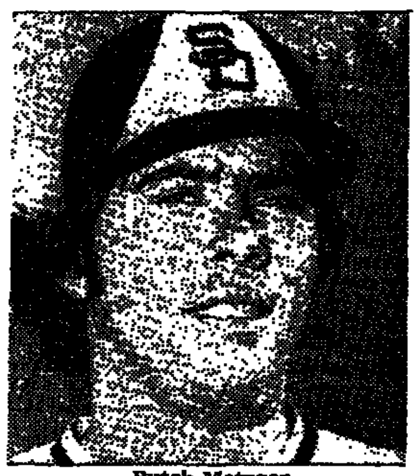
Zachry and Metzger in Tie For Rookie Honors in N.L.

United Press International
Pat Zachry



Butch Metzger

For the first year in the 30-year history of the National League's rookie-of-the-year award, the honors were shared by two players. In balloting by 24 members of the Baseball Writers Association of America (two from each National League city), Pat Zachry of the Cincinnati Reds and Butch Metzger of the San Diego Padres each received 11 votes. The other two votes went to Hector Cruz, a third baseman for the St. Louis Cardinals.

Zachry, a 6-foot-5-inch right-hander who started the season in the bull pen and then became one of the Reds' most reliable starters, won 14 and lost 7 with a 2.74 earned run average. He also won a game in both the playoffs and the World Series. He is the fifth Cincinnati player to win rookie honors, joining Frank Robinson, Pete Rose, Tommy Helms and Johnny Bench.

Metzger, 24, established a rookie record with 77 relief appearances for the Padres. The right-hander compiled an 11-4 record with a 2.93 earned run average, saving 16 games. He also finished the most games (62) and had the league's longest-winning streak, winning 10 games from April 20 to Aug. 8. Metzger came to the major leagues with the San Francisco Giants in 1974, but was traded to San Diego and spent all of 1975 with Hawaii of the Pacific Coast League.

Cruz, 23, hit 13 home runs and drove in 71 runs with a .228 batting average in 151 games for St. Louis.

Joe Louis, one of boxing's great heavyweight champions, became a fight manager when he signed a contract to handle the ring fortunes of Roy Williams, a 27-year-old heavyweight from Philadelphia.

"This is a first for me," said Louis, while watching his man spar three rounds at Gleason's Gym on West 30th Street. "Williams interested me because he's big, he's a good boxer and he's got lots of confidence."

Williams, 6 feet 4 inches and 228 pounds, will have his first fight under Louis on Dec. 11. He will oppose Earnie Shavers of Warren, Ohio, at the Aladdin Hotel in Las Vegas in a 10-round bout that will be televised nationally by CBS Sports.

"When you have a great person behind you, it always helps," said Williams, a counselor at a youth center who has won 21 of 26 fights over 10 years, scoring 14 knockouts and never having been stopped. "Just being in Joe's presence is a great inspiration."

Mary Surrency, the nation's leading woman jockey in purses won with $430,000 this year, will be among 10 women driving harness horses tonight in the Jockette Silver Cup Pace at The Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N. J. The nonbetting mile race will be contested following the fourth race.

Other women jockeys taking part will be Mary Bacon, Nancy Kenny, Janelle Berry, Patty Barton, Jeannie Maxwell, Kim Rice, Mary Longan, Jenny Lynn Hykes and one yet to be named.

HONORS: Carl Yastrzemski, who hit 21 home runs and drove in 102 runs last season, has been selected as the Boston Red Sox most valuable player for 1976 by the Boston baseball writers and will receive the first Thomas A. Yawkey Award at the writers' dinner on Jan. 27. . . . Glen Capriola, a running back for Boston College, was selected by the Holy Cross Club of Boston as the outstanding player in the Boston College-Holy Cross football game (won by B.C., 59-6) and will receive on Dec. 8 the Edward J. O'Melia Memorial Trophy. . . . James McDougald, a freshman running back who gained 1,018 yards for Wake Forest, has been selected as the Atlantic Coast Conference's rookie of the year. . . . John Anderson, whose Brown Football team won eight of nine games and shared the Ivy League championship with Yale, was honored last night as the New England coach of the year at the annual dinner of the New England Sportswriters Association.

In Stoke-on-Trent, England, Dave Carter has decided to give up sports. The 26-year-old Briton made the decision after his third trip to the hospital since he decided two years ago that sports would be beneficial to his health.

While fishing in the Trent River, he was attacked by swans five times and dumped into the water.

He gave up tennis as too dangerous when he hit and stunned his doubles partner with his racquet.

Playing squash racquets, he tripped and smashed his wristwatch and his eyeglasses.

Hunting with a shotgun, he was hit in the face by the recoil and suffered a broken nose.

While playing snooker and leaning over the table for a difficult shot, he hit his head on the overhead light canopy and knocked himself out.

In his first try at soccer, he suffered a dislocated arm, but when it healed he joined a local team.

In his first game, after 20 minutes he suffered a broken toe and his right leg is now encased in a plaster cast to the knee.

"I am accident prone," he said. "Now I've had enough. I'm giving up sport."

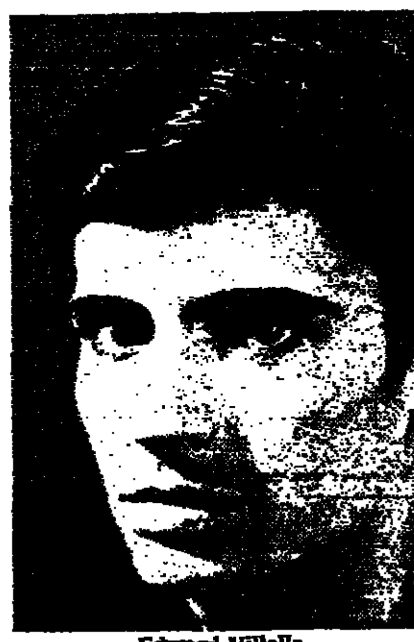
City Ballet's Choreographers Put Their Best Foot Forward



Edward Villella
The characterization was perfect

Before plunging headlong into the lucrative snowbank of "The Nutcracker," the New York City Ballet gave a final look, for the next five weeks at least, at its unequaled repertory. Over the weekend, its two resident choreographers were at their varied best at the State Theater.

It is a good guess that Jerome Robbins's "Afternoon of a Faun" will endure as a special monument to his genius. It is as perfect an expression of mood and emotional crosscurrents as one could ask for. Edward Villella and Allegra Kent were the couple who found themselves alone in a dance studio. Mr. Villella's dramatic intensity lent an air of fine danger to the normally unemotional business of exercising at the barre before a mercilessly unwavering mirror. His emotional energy was finely balanced between the formal business of dancing and the less disciplined business of human passion. The characterization was perfect.

Miss Kent showed a similar feeling for the discipline of dancing and the stirrings of romantic interest. When the latter threatened to spill over, she smoothly sought refuge in the classical practice of ballet exercise, converting personal encounter into the formal adagio of professional prowess. Together they were two beautiful people in an enchanted moment, which ended only when a kiss broke the spell.

On Sunday afternoon, Miss Kent joined Jean-Pierre Bonnefous in George Balanchine's strict, demanding classic "Agon." Their pas de deux showed a full measure of respect for tradition and for the newer 20th-century configurations of formal dancing. The ballet is nearly 20 years old and, like any masterwork, still reveals things about itself at each viewing.

Peter Martins and Kay Mazzo continued their moving portrayal of a couple simply dancing together. They listened to the first portion of Stravinsky's "Duo Concertant" standing by the piano and then, like any young man at a social dance, he invited her to join him. Their simple meeting developed through technical intricacies and ended with his adoring her on bended knee. It could be any man or woman or read as a metaphor for a man and his muse. Miss Mazzo's shy, almost retiring, quality had the perfect resonance for the ballet, as did Mr. Martins's gallant pursuit of her.

"Western Symphony" underwent a shortening in the distant past, was recostumed in the recent past and still retains that air of a prairie play. The cowboys are not the shoot 'em up type, but the singing kind. Wilhelmina Frankfort and Laurence Matthews were the flirtatious first couple, playing and frolicking with abandon, and Jay Jolly competed with mighty leaps against Coleen Neary's long-legged nimbleness. Elyse Flagg was delicately delightful, tagging after the footloose Robert Maiorano and the company, a whirlwind of turning energy.

DON MCDONAGH

Fortepiano in Comeback for Dudley's Haydn Recital

By DONAL HENAHAN

The revival of interest in old instruments, long since freed of the taint of antiquarianism that made many musicians regard it suspiciously, has now brought the fortepiano back into consideration. This is the 18th-century Viennese instrument that served as a link between the harpsichord and the modern piano in the evolutionary scale, although because it has hammers that strike rather than pluck the strings it represents a clean break with the harpsichord tradition and is more truly descended from the clavichord. Essentially a less powerful piano, the fortepiano, or hammerflügel, as the Germans call it, has been late in acquiring a following, possibly because it has been either dismissed as an unsuccessful prototype or cherished merely for its quaintness, like a Model-T that still runs.

Raymond Dudley's all-Haydn recital on a fortepiano at Alice Tully Hall on Sunday night could have given no support to any such misunderstandings. He performed six of the mature but less familiar sonatas and left this listener persuaded that the fortepiano is an ideal instrument for such music.

There was nothing shrunken or undernourished about the sound. The sonorities were robust and yet silvery, and Haydn's harmonic textures had remarkable clarity and openness. Mr. Dudley's fortepiano, a replica of the J. A. Stein instrument at the Smithsonian Institution, could sometimes resemble a harpsichord in the bass, but the beautifully even scale was topped off with a distinctively crystalline tone in the upper octaves that never thinned out or turned tinny.

Mr. Dudley is not a flaming virtuoso by temperament, but his interpretations remained within a framework that an 18th-century listener might have recognized. The instrument's light action often allowed him to display tremendous speed and agility, but he maintained a fastidious reticence much of the time about the emotional content of the music. He decorated the written notes lavishly, some of his seemingly improvised cadenzas almost amounting to small pieces in themselves. While he did not achieve the dynamic range or dramatic expressiveness that a modern piano makes possible, he toyed with rhythms sensitively and at least avoided the metronomic regularity that afflicts some Haydn performances.

The six sonatas on the program were composed in 1776, so Mr. Dudley put them in one package as his own somewhat whimsical Bicentennial gesture. In the new Vienna Urtext Edition, they are Nos. 42 in G, 43 in E-flat, 44 in F, 45 in A, 46 in E and 47 in B minor.

Melissa Manchester
Vital and enthusiastic

Energetic Enthusiasm Of Melissa Manchester Cannot Be Obscured

By JOHN S. WILSON

Melissa Manchester threw herself into her performance at Avery Fisher Hall on Sunday evening with such energetic enthusiasm that not even the thunderous clamor of her nine-piece band could obscure the vitality that she projected. Vitality was almost the only thing she could project when the band was in full cry but when she sat down at the piano and her accompanist took a breather, Miss Manchester was able to supplement the bare force of her personality with a singing voice that had both power and a variety of strong colors.

Focusing on material from her new album, including the catchy, calypso-like rhythms of "Headlines" and a more heavy-handed "Be Somebody," she tended to build her songs through several levels of tension to a fervent, climactic belt. It was a technique that, through repetition, became expected. Thus, she was all the more effective when, on a new song written with her pianist, Stanley Schwartz, "Confide in Me"—a song that had the root feeling of a good pop song of the 20's—Miss Manchester gave it a strong, direct, open treatment without frills that was completely in keeping with the overall mood.

Al Jarreau opened the program with his peculiar form of vocal vaudeville—rhythmic gasps, mutters, poppings and instrumental imitations mixed with lyrics, monologues and vocalizing—delivered in an ingratiatingly throwaway manner that belied the precision and discipline of his delivery.

GOING OUT Guide

SHE "Mujer," meaning "woman" in Spanish, is the title of a new photographic tribute to the Latin woman that opens tomorrow at the Bronx Museum of the Arts, 851 Grand Concourse, at 161st Street. Ten camera specialists, primarily of Spanish origin, have contributed 140 pictures evoking everyday experiences in the life of the Hispanic woman here and abroad—such vignettes as a family portrait of Spanish New Yorkers, a South American mother nursing her baby and a novena said in an at-home chapel in Puerto Rico.

Museum hours are 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. on Monday through Friday and 1 P.M. to 4 P.M. on Sunday.

SCREEN SCENE Every Tuesday until Christmas, starting at 6 P.M., each ticket buyer at the Radio City Music Hall is receiving a 50-cent New York State Lottery ticket as a holiday bonus.

Today: "The Thin Man" (1934) at 5:30 and 8 P.M. (tickets $1.50) at the Downtown Film Club, Pace University (one block east of City Hall). "42d Street" (1933) at 7:30 P.M. in the "Backstage" series at Brooklyn Academy of Music; admission $1.

Tomorrow: "His Girl Friday" (1940) and "Only Angels Have Wings" (1939) in the Cary Grant festival at the Bleecker Street Cinema (674-2560). Hitchcock's "Secret Agent" (1936) at 8:30 P.M. only at Christ and St. Stephen's Church, 120 West 69th Street; admission $1.50 and 75 cents for the elderly. "Moby Dick" (1931), with John Barrymore and Joan Bennett, in the South Street Seaport Museum screenings held at 165 John Street at 5:30 and 8 P.M.; adults $2 and children $1.

Tomorrow and Thursday: "Things to Come" (1936) and "Alphaville" (1965) in the science-fiction program at the New Yorker (TR 4-9189). Tomorrow through Saturday: "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" (1939) and "Follow the Fleet" (1936) at the Regency (724-3700). Also "Spitfire" (1934) and "Alice Adams" (1935) in the Hepburn festival at the Quad Cinema (255-8800).

NEVER TOO LATE Many night-owl television viewers have Joe Franklin to thank for alternate entertainment when the Late Show movies are impossible. And even when they're good, it's hard to resist turning to Channel 9 for the lineup on the "Joe Franklin Show," which is long on show-business nostalgia, with a varied, conversational guest parade that can be fascinating. You never know who will turn up—often more effectively than the earlier network talkfests, with their razzle-dazzle.

Occasionally Mr. Franklin modestly reminds us that Greta Garbo and Irving Berlin are among his regular watchers.

Chances are that neither will be present tonight but Joe Franklin fans are invited (for $10) to attend a celebration of his 23d year on the home screen starting at 9 o'clock at Upstairs at Cecil's, the cabaret room of the discothèque-club at 161 East 54th Street (between Lexington and Third Avenues). Of the $10 admission, $6.50 is the food-and-drink minimum and $3.50 the cover charge.

The guest of honor will assume his familiar role of moderator at the mike. The program calls for appearances by such Franklin-fans as Bill Boggs of the "Midday" show, Tiger Haynes of "The Wiz," Ronny Whyte, the pianist-singer, and others, including some "surprise" guests. Mr. Franklin's reminiscences are expected to include screenings of vintage movies from his personal archives.

Joe Franklin

HOWARD THOMPSON

STEPHEN BERKELHAMMER 'SHARES' HIS SOLO RECITAL

Stephen Berkelhammer's concert in Carnegie Recital Hall Sunday night was more in the nature of a chamber music program than a solo recital. Mr. Berkelhammer, who plays the oboe and recorder, shared the stage with three guests—Karl Kraber, flute, Chris Kinckel, cello, and Dennis Michno, harpsichord—and these four musicians proved, on the whole, to be most compatible collaborators.

The performances unfolded in a friendly, relaxed atmosphere that was instantly appealing and more than compensated for any minor technical lapses. Perhaps the most enjoyable works on the program were the trio sonatas by Bach and Telemann, which sparkled with an agreeably light touch, deft give-and-take ensemble playing and a sensitive interplay of instrumental coloration.

The remaining four selections included a trio for flute, cello and oboe by Haydn, Villa Lobos's "Jet Whistle" for flute and cello, a duo for flute and oboe by Ginastera and the Solo in G by Andrew Parcham. Each piece received sympathetic treatment that made the most of the music's stylistic and textural variety.

...playlets are not unentertaining, ...y are too superficial for the qual... ...riting that has been lavished on them. The Canadian caper is women's magazine stuff full of sentiment and sacrifice, whereas the voyage amid the floating wounded of New York's neurosthenic Sargasso Sea is too conventional in its bizarre unconventionality. One has to be able to believe in nuts, even if they think themselves squirrels.

Robert Greenawalt
Joanna Merlin

Both playlets, particularly the first, had a certain Thornton Wilder spacelessness to them, a nonspecific attempt at a modest universality, and Daniel Freudenberger, in his staging, did well to stress this feel for dramatic ritual.

The acting was exemplary. Tom Aldredge made a perfect armadillo of a Canadian dentist, carapaced in his security shell against the world, and his amiable, unshockable and loving New York eccentric was equally as good. Joanna Merlin neatly paired a spirited Saskatchewan misfit with an Oyster Bay-radical-scavenger who is crazy but articulate about it. As the two lovers of the first playlet, Mary-Joan Negro and John Kauffman were most touching.

Recording of 'Porgy' Completed by RCA

RCA Victor has completed recording the current Broadway production of "Porgy and Bess," with Clamma Dale and Donnie Ray Albert singing the title roles. The company won the recording rights over competition from Columbia and Deutsche Grammophon.

One factor delaying the recording was the question of whether "Porgy and Bess" was to be classified as a Broadway show or as an opera. Max Arons, president of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians, said that initially the union had rejected the opera classification, but that it had changed its stand to avoid the possibility of the venture's going to Europe for packaging.

Agreement between RCA and Local 802 was reached after the recording company agreed to pay the 40 members of the "Porgy and Bess" orchestra between $800 and $1,200 each for the two-day recording stint. The work was done under the union's symphony requirements, which require lower fees than those for the album of a Broadway musical, according to Mr. Arons.

"Porgy and Bess," initially staged in Houston by the Houston Grand Opera and brought to Broadway under the auspices of Sherwin N. Goldman, is at the Uris Theater. It will move to the Mark Hellinger on Dec. 7.

He said he thought it would be fair to erase the debt "because we were the ones to discover the problem, brought it to their attention and set up new procedures so it can never happen again."

ʼhe Mysterious Power of Props: ʼuthor's Friend, Actor's Enemy

By WALTER KERR

Frederic Ohringer
Laurence Luckinbill and Maria Schell in "Poor Murderers"

rops are a playwright's best ıd and an actor's most malevo- enemy. By "props" of course an any physical object that can aken in hand and put to some resting and/or idiot use—a iewhip, a champagne glass, a e scrip of parchment. But I'm I don't have to explain such e terminology to you. What s to be explained is the mysus power props exert to enrapn audience to the point where ircely knows whether the play is any good or not, and to ound actors without warning, nights.

ke "The Robber Bridegroom" ıstance. Quite the nicest effect e entire evening is the matter ing a couple of sawhorses inently. "The Robber Bride-n" is a highly self-conscious, ly synthetic folk-tale done to ry music, and it rather spees in carrying severed heads in trunks and getting the people tied up in sacks. It however, try to keep its g simple and inventive, and wwhorses are as inventive as ing.

show happens to need, at oint, a paddle-wheel steamer ry some of its hill folk updownriver, or some such And so, alongside a mere ıt more or less shaped like a oat, two men pick up saw- that have been lying around egin to spin them in their Do you know what? It looks like a churning packet getting eam than anything old Mark ever piloted did. A nod, to director Gerald Freedor choreographer Donald Sador whoever thought it up.

"Going Up" Props

ıe Robber Bridegroom" also occasional happy use of peo- props, which may be hard on eople, but is a picturesque for the show. When a girl, vants to cross a river by leapom stone to stone, the stones tors, doubled up on the floor, he lass is really doing her tain-goat act by hopping back to back. I suppose I confess along about this point when I saw "The Robber groom," I did not find myself its more ardent partisans; ıow seemed to me, much of ne, too cute for its own good ny digestion, but I did apof, and enjoy, its proving position we all secretly know: magination is better than any nt of paint, canvas, wire-netnd glue.

uspect that "Going Up" ran long as it did during the fall un had to be measured in rather than months, but no) because of a church steeple . a girl (real), and an aviator hanging by his heels from an ted airplane (unseen, natu- We are all simple souls at and the fact that "Going Up" 1917 musical helped unleash ople in us. But how were we *st the spectacle of the hero*ine climbing that steeple to pass flying instruction to the dangling pilot who, never having flown a plane before, needed some information about landing the unfamiliar and invisible craft? In a musical the traditional "11 o'clock spot" is usually the show's best song; here it was a parlay of props and the rigging that held them all up. Safely.

Prop Problems

But I've hinted that props aren't *necessarily safe for actors. Con*sider the opening night of Pavel Kohout's "Poor Murderer" if you will. The performers were all on their very best behavior; certainly, experienced as they were, they'd worked with their hands before, weren't exactly a bunch of butter*fingered dubs. Yet the poor things* had but to touch a false nose or a bridal crown of seed pearls for the inanimate objects to rear up or drop off in defiance. Kevin McCarthy had the false-nose problem. Playing an actor about to rehearse a scene from "Cyrano," he naturally clapped a papier-mâché proboscis rather larger than his own to his face. For about one and one-half seconds. He'd no sooner spoken a word or two, thereby activating his facial muscles, than the nose gracelessly dislodged itself, victim of an inadequate glue-job or those suddenly animated muscles. Mr. McCarthy tried again, laughing merrily the while. Perhaps the laugh did it this time, but the nose abandoned him again. Another try, another stubborn separation, at which point the author himself rescued our troubled actor. The play suddenly shifted gears, "Cyrano" was abandoned and a rehearsal of "Hamlet" begun, with Mr. McCarthy cast as Polonius. Mr. McCarthy was now clearly happier. Polonius may get killed, but at least he doesn't have to hold his hand to his face all night trying to keep his countenance intact.

It was, a bit later, Mr. McCarthy's duty to place the bridal crown, really a slender tiara, on Maria Schell's head. He did it carefully, but it tipped anyway, leaving the sublime Miss Schell looking a wee bit tiddly. He tried again, it tipped the other way. She tried. Back to its first position, for which she settled. She settled, that is to say, until, not long after, it slid down over her forehead and threatened her with imminent blindness, at which juncture it simply had to be more ruthlessly planted in her hair and never mind the delicacy of its symbolism. After all, she couldn't develop the problem into a four-minute comedy routine, the way hostesses in Laurel and Hardy comedies used to. Not in "Poor Murderer," a more serious venture.

Sometimes props get in our eyes, rather than in the actors'. Do you know that I still squirm when a prop baby—and prop babies are about as unreal as anything you'll encounter in this wayward world —is improperly handled or placed? In the visiting Abbey Theater's production of "The Plough and the Stars," one of the male hobgoblins who haunted Sean O'Casey's Dublin tenements suddenly found a blanketed baby dumped in his arms. Wishing to be rid of his burden, he placed it on a narrow ledge, no wider than it was, projecting from a building's façade then went about his business. Now babies, in my experience, sometimes move a little; sometimes they move a lot; often they squirm, as I was already doing. For if that infant had squirmed so much as one half-inch, it would have toppled to the pavement and cracked its little skull. What matter that I know the infant to be nothing more than a bundle of wet-wash or a sawdust-stuffed doll? If I hadn't come to the theater to pretend that it was more than that, I wouldn't have come at all. I don't like the options I'm left with: either to feel hideously nervous for the baby, or to feel a fool for having pretended that it was one.

You see how props, so helpful when the wind is right, can treacherously rattle us all.

years in London, we made a deliberate decision to live here in the village," he said. "The moment a writer attracts attention, he is invited into Society, becomes better known then his characters, joins the West End clique, and craves publicity. We prefer the country, work unwillingly very hard, and have few intolerances."

Seductions of the City

There are certain other advantages for a novelist away from the seductions of the city. "I take a constitutional in the morning after breakfast, saying hello to neighbors, stopping at the greengrocer's and the other shops. I am on very good terms with all the villagers. People tell me about themselves. If a young woman is acting moodily, another whispers to me, 'Boy trouble.' I hear a lot of confidences that are background for stories."

He lights up when recalling many of his friends who are gone but whose works live. "I knew Sinclair Lewis, crossed the Atlantic once with Willa Cather—an honest woman, and I thought her books very good, too—and met F. Scott Fitzgerald. In fact, I was responsible for publication of 'The Great Gatsby' in England, recommending it to Chatto & Windus. Fitzgerald came around to the office and sat there, very brisk, with his hat on. I told him I had enjoyed 'Gatsby.' He took his hat off. He asked me my name. Swinnerton? 'Oh my God,' he said. ' "Nocturne" is one of my favorite books.' "

Swinnerton believes that his own best novel is "Death of a Highbrow," published in 1961. Given the chance, he also wanted to correct the rumor that whenever he completed a book, he ate a hot plum pudding to celebrate. "I only have a plum pudding regularly at Christmas," he says, which may be about the same thing since he writes a book a year.

Does His Own Gardening

Between shopping and doing his own gardening ("Trimming hedges and digging ditches enables you to work and think out stories at the same time"), he is preparing his next three books. The first is a novel, "The Three Daughters," the second a book of literary appreciations, "Share My Delight," the third a biography of Arnold Bennett, which may be called "The Last Word."

Although the "New Grub Street" of George Gissing's 1890's literary world is different today, the struggle for survival still goes on for the serious novelist in England. Swinnerton's readers on both sides of the Atlantic are limited but devoted. There have been some paperback editions of his work, but he does not attain film or television sales, living only off his books. It's still a struggle.

During one negotiation, he recalled, Stewart Richardson, Double*day's editor in chief, informed him* of a possible paperback reprint. Is the fish on the hook yet? Swinnerton inquired. On the hook and in the net, Richardson replied across the Atlantic. In that case, Swinnerton said, I can put a new roof on the cottage.

It is half-past four in the afternoon, and time for a cuppa. "I should imagine that my writing is dated," he says, "but I can't see how it could be otherwise at my age." He sips his tea, says his goodbyes, and then walks behind the cottage to his studio, determined to get in a little more writing before supper.

If your bank gets tight when the money market gets tight, TELL IT TO THE MARINE

Money is easy now. But some banks will just stick around for the good times. When the money dries up, you'll wind up with an apology instead of a loan.

At Marine Midland, we don't want anything to come between you and the money you need. So we've made a commitment to handle the necessary credit needs of every one of our qualified customers. No matter what shape the money market is in.

In fact, we can point to many times when we've continued taking care of our customers' needs when other banks have stopped.

There's a reason why we can back up this commitment. Marine Midland is a major international bank with $9 billion in deposits. Over $541 million in capital and $80 million in reserves. More than 300 branches all over New York State. And offices in 22 countries all over the world.

We want to free you from the inconsistencies of the money market, but don't wait for things to dry up before calling us. The right time to establish a relationship with Marine Midland is right now.

So if your bank ever uses tight money as an excuse for turning you down, tell it to the Marine.

Analysts originally had thought that a smaller surplus or even a slight deficit in the United States trade accounts would help the rest of the world attain a solid economic recovery, but both exports and imports are now running below what they were in July.

Exports were off 1.5 percent in October after the 1.9 percent advance in September. Imports slipped 2.1 percent after a 2 percent climb in September.

The product-by-product breakdown for the month showed that imports of petroleum, coal and other energy products climbed $123.7 million in value after adjustment for seasonal variations. The volume of petroleum and petroleum products imported so far this year is now 18.9 percent ahead on the same period a year ago.

The Commerce figures showed that the biggest single downward influence on imports was passenger cars. Imports from Canada, where many American cars are assembled, were off $133.8 million. Imports of cars from other countries dropped $31 million.

On the export side, corn shipments jumped $326.8 million, but wheat exports slipped $42.2 million, rice shipments dropped $21.1 million and cotton exports fell $50.2 million.

Exports of motor vehicles and parts were off $69.4 million.

Behind the Price Increase for Sheet Steel

The Economic Scene

At his Nov. 15 news conference, President-elect Jimmy Carter said, in response to a question, that he would seek voluntary commitments from labor and business "to try to hold down inflationary pressures." He added that "by using existing mechanisms for discussion, including jawboning techniques by the President," he felt he could avoid any compulsory wage-price controls, barring an unforeseen national calamity.

Some economic analysts thought that the moderate tone of that statement might reassure the business world and forestall any effort to institute any further major price increases by large industries before the new Administration was inaugurated in January.

Yet, last week, a significant price change was made by most of the large steel companies to become effective on short notice—6 percent, tomorrow, on their sheet products that are used so extensively in the automotive and appliance industries. The increase became general yesterday when United States Steel, Bethlehem and Republic decided to join the parade.

That prompted Mr. Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell, to report yesterday that the President-elect was "very concerned" about the effects of the increases.

The steel industry's timing has surprised many industrial observers. And it also puzzled Government officials, who had been hearing reports that steel demand was still lagging.

Everyone is asking, "Why now?" Is the motivation a desire to have higher posted prices in effect for a key product in the event some form of controls is adopted early next year? Or do the steel companies suddenly see more strength in their market and therefore seized upon the opportunity, quickly, to bolster their generally unsatisfactory profits picture?

George A. Stinson, chairman of the National Steel Corporation, which led off the latest round of steel price increases, said in a telephone interview yesterday from Pittsburgh that fears of price controls were not a factor in the pricing decision.

"It was prompted by the continued rise of our costs and the condition of the market," he said. "Our costs have gone up more than 6 percent since the last price increase. These products have been slipping badly in profitability ever since price controls were put in during 1971. Price increases in sheet products have lagged behind other products ever since then."

Mr. Stinson said that prices on various types of sheets had risen 55 to 64 percent since 1971, while heavier products, such as plates, structurals, rails and pipes have gone up by 77 percent to more than 100 percent in that period.

"We have not been able to recapture our cost increases in sheets as they built up," he said. "And we have not been generating funds for our investment program at present levels of profitability."

Nevertheless, a bank economist said he believed the steel-price action was related at least partly to fears of controls.

"I know that actual selling prices for many steel products are still below the posted prices," he said. "Some mills are discounting their prices and others are stretching out payment terms."

SPECIALISTS' TRADING IN OPTIONS ALLOWED IN DECISION BY S.E.C.

PHILADELPHIA PLAN IS BACKED

3 Other Exchanges Have Similar Applications Pending—Impact on Markets Could Be Substantial

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—The Securities and Exchange Commission approved today a proposal by the Philadelphia Stock Exchange that would permit specialists there to trade in listed options on the securities in which they deal.

The decision is significant in that three other exchanges have similar applications pending and because it represents a formal recognition by the S.E.C. that the potential for abuse is outweighed by procompetitive factors.

Moreover, it represents further integration into the securities mainstream of options contracts, which for more than 40 years have been considered almost totally a speculative vehicle readily subject to market manipulation.

Today's decision will not have easily visible effects on ordinary investors, but the impact on the markets could be substantial as specialists begin to hedge positions, thereby reducing price volatility. The specialists will not be permitted to make markets in options, nor do any of the proposals of other exchanges yet contemplate this.

Authorization Given Floor Members

In a companion decision, the commission authorized floor members on the Philadel exchange—formerly the PBW Exchange—to trade securities for which they also have option positions.

Only call options to buy securities are now traded on American securities exchanges. The S.E.C. has said it expects to make a decision on whether to allow puts, or options to sell, early next year.

The S.E.C. tipped its hand on dual trading in September when it advised the National Association of Securities Dealers that, "in an environment of vicorous competitive market-making," it would be appropriate to permit dealers to make markets in both the options and the securities behind them.

The N.A.S.D. had sought assurances that the commission would not object to a plan it was developing, more ambitious than the one approved today in that it embraced market-making, for its membership dealing in the over-the-counter market.

The commission said then it recognized that this market was relatively free of anticompetitive restraints and would provide an opportunity to test the extent to which "competition can be an effective regulator of a unified market for options and their underlying securities."

Anticompetitive Curbs Cited

The commission said today the Philadelphia exchange had more anticompetitive restraints than existed in the over-the-counter market and suggested these —and by implication those of other exchanges—might have to be modified.

These include prohibitions against conducting off-board principal transactions and preferences for floor specialists in odd lots.

On the other hand, the S.E.C. said, since the Philadelphia share of total market volume in securities for which options trading would be permitted by today's decision averages less than 1.7 percent, "the manipulative potential inherent in changing the current restrictions appears insignificant."

An official at the Philadelphia exchange could not say when its specialists would begin to hedge their positions with options, but the delay is not expected to be great.

An S.E.C. staff member observed that the setting up of surveillance procedures should not prove difficult since ticker tapes provide "a record of all these transactions."

The New York Stock Exchange and the Midwest Stock Exchange have presented similar proposals to the commission. The Pacific Stock Exchange has made a preliminary application to change its rules.

Taxes & Accounting

Frederick Andrews says Securities and Exchange Commission's version of inflation accounting is setting the stage for a test of the stock market's smartness. Page 59.

Alcoa Lifting Prices Of Can Aluminum By as Much as 11.2%

The Aluminum Company of America announced yesterday price increases of as much as 11.2 percent on the aluminum it produces for use in certain beer and carbonated beverage cans and specialty containers.

Alcoa, the world's largest aluminum company, said the new prices would become effective with shipments as of Jan. 2. It said the increases would apply to aluminum body stock used for all-aluminum beer and carbonated beverage cans and to general purpose stock used for specialty containers.

The Reynolds Metals Company, the nation's second largest aluminum company, said it "was studying" the Alcoa move but had no further comment.

A spokesman for the Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corporation, reached at its Oakland, Calif., headquarters, said it was "too early for us to comment on the new pricing."

In its announcement, Alcoa, which does not make cans, listed only the actual price increases for the aluminum stock. These were: 6 cents a pound for beer and carbonated beverage body stock; 3.5 cents for general purpose stock and approxi-

Auto Makers to Increase Output Despite Lag in Sale of '77 Models

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Despite flat auto sales since the new-model year started in the fall, the industry is planning sharp production increases in December and the first quarter of 1977.

Ward's Automotive Reports, the industry's statistical service, said the four domestic auto companies were planning production of 701,000 cars in December, up 23 percent from 569,487 in the month last year and best since 1968.

Ward's said the companies were targeting output of 2.57 million cars in the January-March period next year, up 18 percent from 2.17 million built in the first quarter of this year.

The first quarter 1977 output will also be up 19 percent from the fourth quarter 1976 output of 2.16 million, Ward's said. Output in the current quarter will be up 12 percent from last year's 1.93 million.

The auto builders are posting the scheduled increases even though sales in the 1977 model year are off about 3 percent from year-ago levels.

The annual selling rate this month has been 9.5 million, including 8 million domestic and 1.5 million imports.

That is down from the annual rate for calendar 1976 of 10 million, including 8.5 million domestic cars. And it is below the forecasts of executives for 1977 model sales. The forecasts still range up to 11.25 million at the General Motors Corporation. But some executives at the Ford Motor Company and the Chrysler Corporation have lowered their forecasts to 10.5 million.

Production schedules remain high, however, and one auto company analyst said:

"What this means is that the industry still thinks sales are going to pick up—or else that the industry has not admitted that they are really soft. But the general consensus is that the economy is in a sideways movement and cars are in the same pattern—with both likely to pick up in the next few months."

Output in November will wind up totaling 770,000, an increase of 25 percent over the 615,711 in the month last year.

Three Report Production Gains

Output by General Motors was up 25 percent this month, Ford posted a 36 percent gain and Chrysler a 29 percent gain, but American Motors had a 48 percent decline.

In December, G.M.'s output will be 18 percent above last year, Ford's will be 36 percent ahead, Chrysler's will be up 31 percent while A.M.C.'s will be off 15 percent.

For the fourth quarter, G.M.'s output will be up 16 percent from last year, Ford's will be off 6 percent because of the strike impact, Chrysler's will be up 41 percent and A.M.C.'s will be down 37 percent.

Ward's projects output for the full year at 8.48 million cars, up 27 percent from last year's 6.7 million. G.M.'s output will be up 34 percent, Ford's 13 percent, Chrysler's 48 percent but A.M.C.'s will be off 34 percent.

Ward's said the first quarter schedule would be the second highest in history, topped only by the record 2.7 million cars built in the first three months of 1973. Ward's added a note of caution:

"The January-March quarter as it is presently constructed appears to be ambitious unless sales suddenly switch from soft to brisk as the industry turns the corner into the new year."

Ward's noted that G.M., Chrysler and A.M.C. had all closed plants in recent weeks in an effort to control inventories of some small cars that were not selling as well as hoped.

Booming South Korean Economy Clouded As Indicators Lag After Months of Growth

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

ANYANG, South Korea—Two years ago, Kim Ki Chang's new business was floundering. He was trying to sell topaz jewelry to women here, in a land where the average family income totaled only $481 a year.

Today, Mr. Kim's business is flourishing. He is now selling cheap costume jewelry to the affluent women of the United States—and Canada and Australia and West Germany and France and Britain and Japan and the Mideast. "And we're starting to sell now in Africa," he says.

His determination and business success mirrors that of his nation's booming economy, with its growth in its gross national product of more than 11 percent, its rapidly developing heavy industries and its mushrooming exports. This leads to incongruous sights like bands of goats being herded past new skyscrapers.

Turn Into Gloomy Realities

But Mr. Kim's success, like South Korea's, is a precarious one, tightly bound to political and economic factors far from the windswept slopes of this rocky peninsula. And if the sudden drop in a few key economic indicators continues, Mr. Kim's glowing forecasts for 1977 will fast turn into gloomy realities.

Figures for October show that industrial production, shipments and export letters of credit all fell after months of growth. Letters of credit, the crucial indicators of export business two and three months later, totaled $668 million, a monthly decline of 2.6 percent.

"Right now," said Philip D. Sherman, a Citibank vice president and head of the Foreign Bankers Association in Seoul, "I'd call it a small cloud. But it bears very close watching."

Economic analysts here say the declines could be temporary yearend fluctuations or they could presage the arrival in South Korea of the economic lull that hit the United States last summer and crept across the Pacific to Japan in more recent months. There, the Government has adopted a seven-point stimulation program to spur the slowed business recovery rate that had depended so much on exports.

South Korea, too, relies heavily on shipments overseas. When Government officials drew up their 1976 plans, they conservatively forecast an 8 percent growth rate with $6 billion in exports. This was later revised to around 13 percent with $7.5 billion in exports. Last year's gross national product was $18.7 billion.

The global effects of the 1973 oil price rise and the yearlong recession that followed here have prompted vigorous steps to broaden South Korean exports beyond the simple textiles and wigs of earlier days. With strong

Building Contracts Reach a New High

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

Construction contracts rose sharply in October to record levels, the F. W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems reported yesterday. Contract totals for the month, at $10.06 billion, were 31 percent above the level of contracts in the corresponding month of 1975.

The Dodge index of building contract activity, seasonally adjusted, stimulated by nearly $2 billion in electric power facilities, rose to a record 237 (1967-100), up from 164 in September, and 166 in October of 1975.

Five new electric generating facilities in the north-central and south-central regions, together with other so-called nonbuilding contracts pushed this category of construction to $3.27 billion, a gain of 71 percent over the October 1975 level.

Residential building, benefiting from a hefty increase in multifamily building, pushed contracts to a level of $4.06 bil-

You can save valuable tax dollars by avoiding the holiday rush.

If you hold municipals, why should you wait until the last trading days to make tax realignments...when you're at the whim of year-end market pressures and prices?

It makes far more sense to begin now, using the time ahead for more opportune transactions and less pressured decisions.

Besides, there are variances right now between the long and intermediate term markets which suggest a better-than-usual climate for exchanging.

In working to maximize your tax advantages, there are many points with which Kidder, Peabody's expertise can be particularly helpful. Our experience in municipal bonds is one of the most extensive on Wall Street. And whether your portfolio includes five or five hundred bonds, you don't want to miss any available tax opportunity.

To help you, we've prepared special information on 1976 Municipal Bond tax-swapping. Just mail the coupon.

BILL RATES DECLINE TO A FOUR-YEAR LOW

Average 4.466% for 3 Months and 4.567% for 6—Drop Continues in Some Short-Term Rates

By JOHN H. ALLAN

Even though some segments of the credit markets appeared to be resting yesterday after the strong Thanksgiving rally, some short-term interest rates continued to decline and Treasury bills were auctioned at their lowest rates in more than four years. However, it was increasingly believed that interest rates now were going to remain steady until the Federal Reserve signaled its next step toward ease—and that will depend on trends in the economy and the money supply.

Credit Markets

In the Treasury's weekly bill sale, the three-month issue was auctioned at an average rate of 4.466 percent, down from 4.596 percent a week earlier and the lowest rate for these short-term securities since Aug. 25, 1972. Six-month bills were sold at an average rate of 4.567 percent, down from 4.682 percent a week ago and the lowest since Aug. 15, 1972.

Interest rates on Federal funds stayed mostly at 4 11/16 percent (4.69 percent) and the Federal Reserve apparently took no action to change this key rate. The only Fed action yesterday was the sale of $350 million of Treasury bills for the governmental accounts it serves.

"Even though you can build a case that the Federal Reserve eventually is going to adjust the funds rate to 4½ percent," one money market economist said yesterday, "the market has probably already got that idea pretty well built into prices."

In the Government securities market, prices declined slightly early in the day, rebounded and finally drifted lower. At the close, dealers suggested that the new 4¾-month notes scheduled for sale today would likely come at a yield slightly below 6 percent.

In another Treasury financing development, the Government announced that it planned to sell $2 billion of 132-day bills next Tuesday. The bills will mature April 21, 1977.

Corporate bond prices, which jumped as much as 1¾ points last week on top of similar gains the week before, declined slightly yesterday. At the close, Bell System bonds yielded 5 percent or slightly less.

Tomorrow, the Mountain States Telephone and Telegaph Company is scheduled to sell $150 million of 40-year debentures, and the issue may be the first Bell System bond issue priced to yield less than 8 percent since November 1973.

Two corporate issues were priced late yesterday for formal offering to investors today.

In the larger, the Houston Natural Gas Corporation's $60 million of 25-year debentures were given an 8.20 percent interest rate and priced at 100 percent of their face value. This 8.20 percent yield is 50 basis points lower than the 8.70 percent rate on a smaller issue of A-rated Southern Union Company 20-year debentures marketed on Oct. 28.

The Houston Natural Gas debentures, rated A by Moody's and A+ by Standard & Poor's, are being offered by an underwriting syndicate managed by White, Weld & Company.

An underwriting group led by Salomon Brothers expects to offer today $40 million of Union Tank Car Company A-rated equipment trust certificates. The total will include $7.2 million of serial certificates yielding 6¾ percent in 1980, 7 percent in 1981 and 7⅛ percent in 1982. It will also include $32.8 million of 20-year certificates offered as 8.20's at par.

University Patent's Stock Reaction

By ROBERT METZ

When a company announces "a new energy source using available materials not used before to produce energy," there is likely to be a stock market reaction.

That is precisely what happened when University Patents, small as corporations go, announced in mid-November that it had signed a contract to market such a technology on an exclusive basis.

University shares were trading in the mid-20's in the over-the-counter market when the announcement came—with no further details pending patent application. They reached 29 bid, 29½ asked on Friday on a heavy turnover of 22,300 shares. The stock closed yesterday at 28⅞ bid, 28⅝ asked.

The private concern was formed in 1964 as part of the University of Illinois, handling patentable items resulting from the university's research efforts. It later became a public company but continued to represent the university in the same capacity as before and began seeking similar arrangements with other universities. It now represents about half a dozen of them.

Although University Patents has succeeded in marketing several of its patented processes and devices to major corporations, it loses money on patents as a group. The company does not provide a breakdown of royalties earned on individual patents.

A spokesman for University Patents said that the company had received $1 million in advance royalties from I.B.M. for a device that substitutes for cathode tube display equipment. While I.B.M. uses the device, technically a "plasma display matrix," in 11 of its products, it has used only $200,000 of the $1 million in prepaid royalties to date.

University Patents has licensed both Beatrice Foods and Bristol Myers to produce and market its soy product, a liquid food sometimes called soy milk.

The University Patents spokesman said that the Roosevelt ballroom was chosen in reflection of expressions of interest in the last few months from stockholders and other interested parties. He said that about 200 attended last year's meeting.

A spokesman for Beatrice foods said that the company was impressed with the soy product but added that none of the company's autonomous profit centers had asked to market it. Beatrice, therefore, has no present plans to introduce and market the product in the foreseeable futue.

This is typical of the business of launching new products, as University Patents pointed out in its annual report. The report noted that it is often years before a patented product produces profits if ever.

But in the meantime, Regal Rugs Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, has put University Patents in the black. In the fiscal year ended July 31, 1976, Regal earned $607,000 on revenues of $8.65 million. Patent revenues, on the other hand, totaled $355,000, producing a $307,000 loss. Overall operating income was thus $300,000, or 13 cents a share, up from 3 cents a share in the prior fiscal year.

What worries cautious investors is that, selling in the high 20's, University Patents stock carries a price-earnings ratio of 50. The company retained earnings account shows a deficit of $1.2 million.

University Patents is headed by L. William Miles, who formely was director of commercial development for I.B.M.

Asked about the mysterious energy process, the University Patents spokesman said that he did not consider any particular technology owned by the company to be any more exciting than any other the company was developing.

As for the movement in the company's shares, he said that he was neutral—neither happy nor unhappy with the market. One brokerage letter noted that relatively few people had attended University Patent's annual meeting last year in Stamford, Conn. The report added that this year's meeting—which is to be held next Tuesday at 2 P.M.—would be at the Roosevelt ballroom, which is capable of holding 1,000 people.

Colombian Coffee Price Expected To Increase to Over $2 a Pound

BOGOTA, Colombia, Nov. 29 (AP)—Colombian coffee will be priced at over $2 a pound within the next few days on the internationa market, the National Association of Coffee Exporters forecast today.

Colombian coffee is currently priced at $1.90 a pound and due to the favorable situation in the international market, Colombia has started a plan to increase production.

Colombia raised its domestic coffee prices by 8 percent last Friday, and it is expected that this increase will be reflected in the international market, said Gilberto Arango, president of the exporters' association.

Predicting Economy: Multimillion-Dollar Business

They are the economic models that ...to project on the basis of current ... and past experience what will ...pen to national economies or indus... or regional sectors in the future. ...hey have become, as was pointed ...here at a recent seminar of French-...erican econometricians, the econo...s who create the models, a multi...ion-dollar industry.

...ata Resources of the United States, ...by a former Presidential economic ...ser, Otto Eckstein, has just gone ...lic, showing revenues of $12 million ...ar.

$2 Million a Year in Projections

...e Wharton School model, managed ...awrence R. Klein, a close adviser ...President-elect Jimmy Carter, sells ...projections for $2 million a year. ...e day, says Gary Fromm of the Na... Bureau of Economic Research in ...hington, one may be able to flash on a television screen in the White House data that will show just where the economy is and then tell the Chief Executive exactly how to achieve the goals he wants. "Perhaps we'll see it by 1984," he says.

But there is a danger, too, as noted by one of the leading econometricians of France, Prof. Raymond Courbis of the University of Paris. For every set of data, one can find a model, he says. But for every model one also can find an appropriate set of data, he adds.

How the Models Work

How do the models work? First according to Professor Klein of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, one lays out the network of what the model is supposed to cover—an entire economy, a region, an industrial sector. Then one prepares a data bank and determines the coefficients of technology, raw materials, prices, and wages that fit the model to the real world.

Professor Klein, who has been here for the last week not only to attend the econometricians' seminar but also to take some soundings on the European economy for Mr. Carter's transition team, is the director of one of the most ambitious of the models, which is known as Project Link.

This shows the interreaction of the economies of the 13 major industrial powers, projecting patterns of trade and growth, and feeding back the information to governments and other customers including half a dozen Federal agencies in Washington.

It's possible to get more information about nations than regions in the United States, says Prof. Harold Shapiro of the University of Michigan, who is building some regional models but finds such obstacles as lack of data on intraregional trade flows, regional profits and investments of corporations.

Yet corporations are among the biggest clients of the model makers. Some of the larger enterprises, such as the International Business Machines Corporation, have constructed their own models.

U. S. a Major Client

While it also is a major client, the Federal Government uses two key models in forecasting the economic climate, says Albert Hirsch of the Commerce Department. One is managed by the Federal Reserve Board and assists the governors in shaping monetary policy. The other is run by the Bureau of Economic Analysis, a subdivision of the Commerce Department.

Court Won't Decide On an Import Levy Imposed by Nixon

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 (AP)—The Supreme Court refused to decide today whether President Richard M. Nixon had the authority in 1971 to impose a temporary 10 percent surcharge on imports to help curtail a national economic crisis.

The Alcan Sales division of the Alcan Aluminium Corporation, which imports aluminum from Canada, filed suit in the Customs Court challenging the levy. That court ruled in favor of the Government, and the ruling was upheld by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

The Supreme Court turned down the appeal that Mr. Nixon had no such authority and that some $500 million in surcharges was wrongfully collected. He lifted the surcharge on Dec. 21, 1971.

Mr. Nixon imposed the surcharge on most imports in an order Aug. 15, 1971, after declaring that a "national emergency" existed. "There has been a prolonged decline in the international monetary reserves of the United States," the President said in imposing the additional import tax.

Alcan argued to the Supreme Court that the lower court ruled that the Government was wrong in contending that the President could assume a power usually reserved for Congress under the Tariff Act of 1930 or the Trade Expansion Act of 1962.

And the lower court erred, Alcan said, when ruling that the Trading with the Enemy Act of 1917 could be applied to give the President such authority.

Even if such authorization could be found in that legislation, Alcan said, it should not have been used to impose peacetime duties on friendly nations such as Canada.

In urging the Court not to review Alcan's appeal, the Justice Department said the Trade Act of 1974 specifically empowered the President to impose such import surcharges. Alcan argued, however, that the 1974 act should have no bearing on its suit filed three years earlier.

Blast Rocks Petroleum Plant

KANSAS CITY, Kan. Nov. 29 (UPI)—An explosion last night in a gasoline processing unit lit up the sky at the Phillips Petroleum Company refinery, the third explosion to rock the Fairfax plant in recent months. There were no injuries. The plant manager, W.J. Snoddy, said he did not know what had caused the blast in the processing unit, indicating only that it involved butane and propane.

nflation Accounting and the Market

By FREDERICK ANDREWS

ng other things, the Securities xchange Commission's highly ersial version of inflation ac- is setting the stage for a te t smart the stock market is. . .

as the S.E.C. abruptly reverses n—which is not expcted—more 000 of the nation's largest nonfi- corporations will be required lose in this year's financial re- lle estimated cost of replacing roductive capacity and invento- current prices.

eat many companies, if not most, ng such corporate giants as the l Motors Corporation and the Electric Company, oppose the ment-cost disclosures. They are that the initial disclosures will tock prices to tumble by leading rs to conclude that conventional ing has substantially overstated panies' earnings.

arp contrast, another school of contends that the replacement- closures should not trigger any le reduction in stock prices. Ac- to this view, which is most it in university circles and market analysts, the stock mar- long known about inflation, es already include a rough cal- of its impact on particular ies.

e is no reason to believe that vill be downward revision in merely] because the replacement ta will imply lower earnings," of. William H. Beaver of Stan- iversity. Professor Beaver made nt in a paper prepared for an ing symposium at Duke Univer- ursday and Friday on the finan- formation needed for security s.

view is bolstered by statistical showing—for the economy as —a much higher correlation be- stock market prices and corpo- ofits adjusted for inflation than adjusted corporate profits.

erous companies and accounting oppose the S.E.C.'s replacement- les as imprecise, subjective, un- in meaning and lacking in uni- . The companies are especially ned, however, by the require- to disclose what depreciation s would have been if based on eplacement cost of plant and ent, rather than on its historical, or original, cost, as is currently required.

The hypothetical depreciation figure would almost certainly be much higher than a company's actual depreciation charges. Though the S.E.C. neither requires nor encourages companies to disclose an inflation-adjusted net income —in fact, the agency has warned against "simplistic" use of the new data —companies fear that investors will simply subtract the additional depreciation from net income and conclude that reported earnings are exaggerated.

Last summer, the S.E.C. rejected an industry request that this year's initial round of replacement cost data be kept secret while the agency's staff studied whether the figures actually served a useful purpose. Currently before the S.E.C. is a request to permit the companies in an industry to withhold replacement-cost data for simultaneous release after conventional results for 1976 have been announced.

Some corporate officers contend the simultaneous release would prevent an adverse stock market reaction from falling unfairly on the first companies to report 1976 results. Others fear the procedure would call undue attention to the replacement-cost disclosures.

The S.E.C. staff remains unpersuaded that replacement-cost data would set off widespread reductions in stock market prices. "There may be some realignments," a staff member said, "but it's hard for me to believe that sophisticated investors aren't already aware that U. S. Steel has a lot of tired equipment out there."

Professor Beaver of Stanford also contended it would be naive to believe "the market has been fooled by the 'illusory' profits reported under a historical cost system." In his view, stock prices reflect a broad range of information, rather than "myopic reliance on reported accounting numbers." He stressed the importance of information obtained directly from companies by securities analysts and put into circulation throughout investment circles.

From that perspective, Professor Beaver said, the impact of replacement-cost disclosures would depend more on whether the data confirmed or contradicted the market's expectations than on the disclosures themselves. And he saw no reason to conclude that market expectations have been uniformly pessimistic or optimistic.

Another advocate of replacement-cost disclosures is William S. Easman Jr. of the securities firm of Faulkner, Dawkins & Sullivan and founder of an investment service, "Inflation Accounting/Indexing & Stock Behavior."

Mr. Easman's econometric studies have consistently found a high correlation between corporate profits adjusted for replacement costs and stock market movements. He also contends that stock prices should not be depressed merely because adjusted profits are lower than conventional figures.

At present, his service offers its institutional subscribers estimated replacement cost data for 1975 for the 30 companies making up the Dow Jones industrial average. That report, developed by two consultants, Prof. Roman L. Weil and Angela Falkenstein, also shows how to make and interpret similar estimates for other companies.

Accountants Lacking on Audit Committees

The audit committees of the nation's largest companies tend to be made up of bankers, investment bankers and industrialists. Members with accounting expertise are conspicuous by their absence.

Those are among the findings of a mail survey of the Fortune 500 corporations by two business school professors, Dov Fried and Allen Schiff. The results, reported in the current Financial Analysts Journal, cover responses from 204 companies and include 767 audit committee members in total. More than half of the companies had three-member audit committees.

Bankers or investment bankers filled 204 of the 767 positions on the audit committees, with 179 from industry. Professors Fried and Schiff suggest that retired or practicing certified public accountants would make ideal committee members—assuming they had no ties to the company's independent auditors—but they were disappointed to find only rare instances of the appointment of accountants.

Commerce Department Delays Index Report

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 (AP)—The Commerce Department has postponed for one day the release of a key report on the economy.

Agency analysts said today that the index of leading economic indicators for October was not ready for release tomorrow as scheduled, and will be released on Wednesday instead.

The October index is considered more important than usual because the index declined by seven-tenths of 1 per cent in both August and September. Many economists believe that three monthly declines in a row point to an over-all decline in the economy.

In the opinion of Bond Counsel, based on existing statutes, regulations, rulings and court decisions, the interest on the Bonds is exempt from Federal income taxes, and, by virtue of the New York State Energy Research and Development Authority Act, are exempt from New York State and New York City income taxes, all as set forth in the Official Statement.

Connecticut General's performance in group dental insurance ranks first in recent independent poll* of dentists

Recently, a professional association surveyed dentists in four Midwestern states. Among other things, they asked them to evaluate the general performance of a number of insurance carriers they dealt with on a giant industry dental insurance program. Over 800(1) dentists replied to the questionnaire. And one company received a higher percentage of "good" marks than any other.

Connecticut General.

INSURANCE CARRIERS	GOOD(2)	FAIR(3)	POOR(4)
Connecticut General Life Insurance Co.	83.0	15.9	1.1
Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.	69.2	26.0	4.8
Ohio Medical Indemnity Plan	65.5	29.4	5.0
John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.	53.0	36.4	10.6
Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Michigan	50.9	38.3	10.8
Delta Dental Plan of Michigan	30.9	44.0	25.1
Aetna Life and Casualty	23.3	47.5	29.2

Eighty-three percent of the dentists who rated Connecticut General felt our performance was good. As you can see from the chart, this is head and shoulders above our competitors. On the other hand, only 1.1 percent of them found our general performance to be poor.

Each carrier in this giant dental insurance program provides essentially the same benefits. Where we have the edge is that our service is "usually prompt, courteous and problem-free." We think most companies want a dental program without grief and hassle for the employer and the patient. Good service is as important to the patient and employer as it is to the dentist.

But don't think we got high marks because we gave away the store. Even though our emphasis is on service, our financial experience has been very good. Because we're out to put every claim dollar to maximum use. We want the employee to have the proper care at the proper cost.

So, if you're considering group dental insurance, you definitely owe it to yourself to call Connecticut General.

In fact, come to think of it, even if you're not in the market for dental insurance, maybe you should check us out.

Pioneer in the field.

We were one of the first companies to offer group dental insurance. We started over ten years ago. And because we've been at it so long, we've had time to get the bugs out of our system. As well as find the best ways to get good dental care at a fair price.

We've even set up a network of regional claim offices around the country. And they handle dental claims and only dental claims.

Consultants are professionals.

Each office has a practicing dentist to act as a dental consultant. He's there as a liaison between the claim office and the dentist filing the claim. He can help avoid a lot of misunderstandings.

But maybe one of the biggest things our claim offices do for you is pretreatment review. With our system, the dentist sends in a description of the work to be done. The claim office reviews it and tells him exactly what's covered. So the patient and the dentist know where they stand going in.

Then there's our emphasis on preventive care. Getting the problem before it becomes a big – and costly – one.

All in all, our aim is to give you a plan that satisfies the employer, the employee and dentist, and then do our best to keep it that way.

If you want to know more about Connecticut General's group dental insurance program, mail this coupon, or call us toll-free at 800-243-8417.

A leading economic forecaster said that Jimmy Carter's announced goal of 6 percent growth of the economy next year and a drop in unemployment to 6.4 percent of the labor force cannot be achieved, even with a big tax reducion. Michael Evans, president of Chase Econometrics, said in a statement released in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., that "the very best we'll be able to do next year is 5 percent real annual growth, and even that is purely theoretical because it assumes speedy enactment of a $50 billion across-the-board tax reform and reduction law that doesn't stand a chance of being passed." None of the proposals to stimulate the economy that have been discussed, Mr. Evans said, "will have any noticeable effects on real growth, inflation or unemployment" in 1977, Mr. Evans said.

here are serious potential huread. An oil price rise could likebsorbed locally—South Korea's oil bill is $1.3 billion—through round of enforced conservation es and price rises (gasoline still or $2 a gallon, now including ercent tax).

nflation has been brought down to about 10 percent on wholesale prices and 12 percent retail. But an oil price rise would affect South Korea through its impact on the economies of this country's customers.

With the recent business boom, the reduced $900 million trade deficit and foreign currency reserves at a record $2.5 billion, nagging concerns over South Korea's heavy foreign borrowing seem to have eased for the moment. Debts total about $10 billion and are scheduled to grow to about $17 billion.

"But they are pretty well spread out between long and short term," said one financial expert. And their sources are being diversified, too, with European banks and Middle East sources playing a greater role.

"All in all," said Mr. Sherman, the banker, "things look reasonably good for the moment. But the fundamentals here mean you've got to keep the sharpest vigilance."

Japanese Industry Down Third Month

TOKYO, Nov. 29 (AP)—Japan's industrial activity indicators posted their third consecutive monthly decline in October and the prospect for improvement in the economy this year or early 1977 is growing dim, the Ministry of International Trade said today.

Preliminary figures show that Japan's mining and manufacturing activity fell 0.1 percent in October from the previous month. The industrial activity indicator remained 11.6 percent above the year-earlier level, but it already has fallen 0.4 percent in September and 1.7 percent in August.

STATE IS CRITICIZED IN FIGHT ON MOPEDS

Department Denies That It Seeks to Restrict the Market to a Favored Manufacturer

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL

A new state law legalizing slowspeed motorcycles and motor-bicycles for the first time goes into effect tomorrow with the State Department of Motor Vehicles already trying to put the brakes on the program.

The Department's actions have provoked industry charges that it is seeking to restrict the market to a favored manufacturer — charges state officials deny.

The officials acknowledge, however, the issuance of a misleading press release that served to compound the controversy and confusion by mixing up the law and an administrative opinion by Commissioner James P. Melton.

"By these actions the department has captured unchallenged possession of the award for administrative abuse of 1976," charged Leonard A. Fink, a lawyer for one of the motor-bicycle manufacturers, Steyr-Daimler Puch of America Inc.

The new law, enacted in Albany on July 26 to take effect Dec. 1, sets up new categories of slow gas-conserving transport that heretofore could not legally be used.

These included the motorized bicycle, or "moped" (for motor/pedal); two classes of small motorcycles going up to 40 miles an hour, and electric or other experimental-type cars going between 17 m.p.h. and 40 m.p.h.

Defined as Kind of Bicycle

In all cases, operators have to be at least 16 years of age. Operators of the small motorcycles and cars need a license and varying degrees of insurance and registration. They are also limited initially to six test areas encompassing New York, Buffalo and other large cities.

But moped operators need none of these and may travel up to 17 m.p.h. wherever bicycles are permitted.

It is the mopeds that are at the center of the controversy.

The law defined them as a kind of bicycle "friction driven, designed to be propelled by a motor of one horsepower or less with a maximum attainable speed of not more than 17 miles per hour."

However, in an administrative "opinion" Nov. 5, Commissioner Melton said that only vehicles with a friction motor directly over the front wheel were mopeds. The others, with a chain-drive, he asserted, came under the category of small motorcycles.

The opinion was quickly assailed by at least half a dozen manufacturers. They noted that only two of about 80 moped manufacturers use the front-wheel drive, the rest use chain drive.

Australia Devaluing Is Joined by Papua And New Zealand

SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 29 (UPI)—A devaluation of the Australian dollar caused similar devaluations today of the currencies of neighboring New Zealand and Papua New Guinea.

Australia's devaluation yesterday pegged the Australian dollar at 1.017 against the United States dollar, compared with Friday's closing quote of 1.235, making the two currencies roughly equal in value on international monetary markets.

New Zealand waited until today to announce it was following suit by devaluing its currency by 12.7 percent against the Australian dollar and 7 percent against other world currencies, including the United States dollar. Prime Minister Robert Muldoon said the effect of the action was to peg New Zealand's currency at about 91 cents to the Australian dollar.

A 12.5 percent devaluation was announced by Papua New Guinea against the Australian dollar and 7.25 percent against other world currencies.

The immediate impact of the devaluations will be to increase the cost of imports, making local industries more competitive and making exports more attractive on international markets.

Share prices of Australia's big mineral exporters skyrocketed on Sydney's stock exchange following the devaluation. National Resources and Overseas Trade Minister Doug Anthony said the devaluation would stimulate investment in major resource projects.

BUILDING CONTRACTS REACH A NEW PEAK

lion, a gain of 28 percent over last year's level.

F. W. Dodge reported that a mixed pattern in nonresidential building contracts resulted in a total of $2.72 billion, a gain of 6 percent over October 1975. Declines were reported in contracts for schools, public buildings, and recreational facilities, but gains occurred in stores, offices and hospitals. Contracts for manufacturing plants held approximately even with year-ago values.

George A. Christie, vice president and chief economist for F. W. Dodge, noted that it should not be long before the recent $3.7 billion appropriation under the Public Works Employment Act of 1976 result in gains in contracts for highways, sewers and public buildings.

For the first 10 months of 1976, contract values totaling $87.2 billion were 9 percent over the level of contracts in the similar period of 1975. Residential building contracts at $36.6 billion were ahead by 38 percent, nonresidential building contracts at $24.9 billion were off by 3 percent.

Dollar and Pound Firm; Gold Off

BRUSSELS, Nov. 29 (UPI)—The United States dollar held its own in slow trading on foreign-exchange markets today. The pound was unchanged against the dollar but fell against European currencies. Dealers said conditions were quiet and apparently unaffected by the devaluations of the Australian and New Zealand currencies.

The price of gold was lower, closing in London at $129.75 an ounce and at $129.50 in Zurich, a drop on both bullion markets of 75 cents from Friday.

The pound closed unchanged in London at $1.6485 but fell in Zurich from 4.03 to 4.0228 Swiss francs and in Frankfurt from 3.97 to 3.958 West German marks.

Sterling's effective devaluation since 1971 widened from 45.5 to 45.6 percent measured against the currencies of Britain's 10 major trading partners.

The dollar was mixed with marginal changes. It fell in Frankfurt, closing at 2.402 German marks, down from 2.404; in Paris at 4.992 French francs against 4.995; and in Amsterdam at 2.5075 Dutch guilders, down from 2.51 Friday.

However, it advanced in Zurich to 2.4412 Swiss francs from 2.4405; in Brussels to 37.05 Belgian francs from 36.7850, and in Milan to 865.9 lire from 865.4.

The dollar also rose in Tokyo, closing at 295.65 yen, up from 295.49 Friday.

NOTICE OF MEETING
FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS
SOUTHWESTERN PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY

Notice is Hereby Given, that, pursuant to Section 13.02 of the Indenture of Mortgage and Deed of Trust, dated August 1, 1946, as supplemented (the "Indenture"), between Southwestern Public Service Company and Chemical Bank, as successor Trustee, securing the First Mortgage Bonds of the Company, and on request of the Company, a meeting of the holders of the Bonds is hereby called to be held at Chemical Bank, Auditorium, 13th Floor, South Building, 55 Water Street, New York, N.Y. 10041, on February 9, 1977, at 11 o'clock, A.M., New York time, for the purpose of voting upon resolutions to modify or alter the Indenture—

(1) to increase the $500,000,000 limit upon the amount of Bonds issuable under the Indenture,

(2) to eliminate the adverse effect of increased operating revenues related to certain excess fuel costs in the computations of (a) the Company's obligation in respect of the maintenance, repair and replacement of its physical properties, (b) Net Earnings required for the issuance of additional Bonds and (c) Net Income of the Company available for the payment of dividends,

(3) to modify the requirements in respect of the opinion of counsel required upon the bonding of property additions; and to eliminate a covenant of the Company to conform to certain governmental requirements, and

(4) to increase the amount of Additions Credit which may be established, and the dollar amount of property which may be released from the lien of the Indenture without certification of value by an Independent Engineer.

Holders of record on November 12, 1976 of Bonds registered as to principal and of fully registered Bonds will be entitled to vote at the meeting.

Holders of bearer Bonds will be entitled to vote at the meeting in accordance with regulations established by the Trustee.

Any holder of Bonds may obtain (1) the Information Statement relating to the meeting setting forth such voting regulations and the text of the proposed modifications of the Indenture, (2) a form of proxy card to be used to vote registered Bonds and (3) a form of Ownership Certificate and Proxy to be used to vote bearer Bonds, by

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION

Delaware Transportation Authority (As Successor To The State Highway Department Of The State Of Delaware)

DELAWARE TURNPIKE REVENUE BONDS

Series Dated January 1, 1962 and Series Dated July 1, 1963
Due January 1, 2002

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that pursuant to the terms of the Trust Agreement, dated as of January 1, 1962, as amended, by and between Delaware Transportation Authority (as successor to the State Highway Department of the State of Delaware) and Bank of Delaware, as Trustee, the Delaware Transportation Authority intends to redeem and has called and does hereby call for redemption on all the outstanding Delaware Turnpike Revenue Bonds of the series of said bonds dated January 1, 1962 and of the series of said bonds dated July 1, 1963 of the Delaware Transportation Authority (as successor to the State Highway Department of the State of Delaware, the issuer of said bonds), aggregating $23,175,000 in principal amount, bearing interest at the rate of 4⅛% per annum, and due January 1, 2002, at the principal amount thereof, together with the interest accrued thereon from January 1, 1977 to January 2, 1977 ($0.12 per $1,000 bond), plus a premium of 3% of such principal amount for the series of said bonds dated January 1, 1962 and a premium of 3½% of such principal amount for the series of said bonds dated July 1, 1963.

January 2, 1977

On said January 2, 1977, there will become and be due and payable at the office of Bank of Delaware hereinafter referred to, in the City of Wilmington, Delaware, or, at the option of the holder of any coupon bond not registered as to the principal alone, at the office of Chemical Bank hereinafter referred to, in the Borough of Manhattan, City and State of New York, the principal amount of said bonds and the accrued interest thereon, together with the premium set forth above, and after said date interest on said bonds shall cease to accrue, interest coupons on coupon bonds payable after said date shall be void, said bonds shall cease to be entitled to any benefit or security under said Trust Agreement and the holders or registered owners of said bonds shall have no rights in respect thereof except to receive payment of the redemption price thereof and the accrued interest.

All bonds are required to be presented at Bank of Delaware, 300 Delaware Avenue, Wilmington, Delaware, or, at the option of the holder of any coupon bond not registered as to principal alone, at Chemical Bank, 20 Pine Street, New York, New York, for redemption and payment on or after January 2, 1977.

The coupon bonds should be accompanied by all coupons appertaining thereto and maturing subsequent to January 1, 1977. Coupons maturing January 1, 1977 or prior thereto should be detached and presented for payment in the usual manner. Coupon bonds registered as to principal alone and registered bonds without coupons must be accompanied by proper instruments of assignment in blank where payment to anyone other than the registered owner is desired.

...e full fiscal year the company's net came to $174.1 million, or $6.02 a share, an increase of 119.3 percent from the fiscal 1975 net of $79.4 million, or $2.77 a share.

The 1975 net consisted of operating earnings of $115.9 million, or $4.09 a share, and a $44.6 million loss from the Wisconsin Steel division. The proposed sale of the division to the McLouth Steel Corporation last December was terminated and discussions have been held with other potential buyers since then.

Brooks McCormick, president, said the company was "especially pleased with the increase in the return on sales of 3.2 percent this year against 2.2 percent in fiscal 1975." The chief executive said the strong demand for agricultural equipment, especially in this country, a profit turnaround in truck operations and improvement in finance sales operations contributed to the record results.

BIG 3 STEELMAKERS JOIN IN PRICE RISES

week earlier the industry produced 2.21 million tons, but this was off 4.1 percent from the preceding week. Last week's production meant that in the shortened Thanksgiving week the industry was using 67.9 percent of its total capability, also the year's low point.

Daniel Y. Greiff, executive vice president of Bellesteel Industries, a large East Boston, Mass., steel service center, said he was "shocked at the speed of the price increases and our customers' reaction has been absolutely violent, even though we had warned them the price hikes were coming in the first quarter of 1977."

'Unfortunate,' Chrysler Asserts

A spokesman for the Chrysler Corporation, said:

"The steel price hike at this time is particularly unfortunate. It is another major cost item which only adds to the inflationary pressures we are under and increases even more the costs which we have not received through new vehicle prices."

A Ford Motor Company spokesman said that the company "insisted in October that higher than expected costs could necessitate further price increases during the 1977 model year. Although we do not have any present plans to increase prices, we are studying the steel price increase and higher than expected cost increases in other areas to see if any action is warranted."

Some auto analysts said the 6 percent price increase comes to about $25 a car.

Appliance makers estimated the effect on prices of major appliances would be "a little less than 6 percent."

Comments by Other Users

The RCA Corporation said that "this is just part of the continuing cost pressures that confront us as purchasers of raw materials."

The spokesman for a major farm equipment maker said he was "more than a little surprised in light of Mr. Speer's recent statement."

Bethlehem Steel, the nation's second largest producer, was the first to announce yesterday morning that it was going along with the increase announced last Wednesday by the National Steel Corporation and the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, fourth and seventh largest steelmakers, respectively. Republic and U. S. Steel followed with their announcements in the afternoon.

Asked about the forecast Nov. 8 that he did not foresee any stel price increases this year, Mr. Speer said that he had "miscalculated."

The United States Steel chief executive said at a news conference after a regional stockholders' meeting in Detroit that the automobile industry had been urging against a steel price increase but he added that "there is no question that the steel industry needs an increase in flat-rolled products, strictly on the economics."

Allegheny Ludlum Industries Inc. was the only one of the 10 major steelmakers that was not quoted on pricing of sheet and strip because it does not make those products. However, one week ago it announced a 6 percent increase on specialty steels, effective Jan. 1. This was followed by Jones & Laughlin.

The McLouth Steel Corporation, which ranks among the next five steel producers, said it was raising its prices for sheet steel "in line with the general price increase effective Dec. 1."

The Alan Wood Steel Company, a small producer, said it was asking the United Steelworkers of America to accept a 15 percent decrease in gross wages and other changes in fringe benefits so that the company could "become competitive."

Officials Express Concern

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—Officials at the Council on Wage and Price Stability expressed concern today that a price rise for flat-rolled steel could weaken the already faltering economic recovery.

However, there was no sign that the council or the White House would take any direct action to bring about a rollback. The council expected to mail today or tomorrow requests to the steel companies raising prices for data on costs, sales and profits. Council officials said that they were not immediately disputing the steel companies' assertions that they had not covered all recent cost increases with price increases. Rather, the council was arguing that demand for steel is too weak—a reflection of the lack of vigor in the economy overall—to justify a price rise now.

Higher prices of steel sheet and strip could contribute to the economic slowdown by pushing up costs and perhaps prices of cars, appliances and many other products, officials said. They noted that the council for some time has asserted that industries dominated by a few companies with large shares of the market should not expect to recover all costs when the economy is weak.

It was learned that George Stinson, chairman of the National Steel Corporation, disclosed his plans to raise prices to council officials last Wednesday hours before the public announcement. The advice was relayed to the White House, where L. William Seidman, a presidential assistant, promptly authorized the council to say that it was examining the price increase. That appeared to be the extent of the Administration's interest.

Economic Scene: Behind the Rise In Price of Sheet Steel Products

ing significantly, the higher prices for sheet steel will not hold. That's what happened late this summer when the leading steel companies tried to put through a smaller price increase on the same products with a longer lead time —45 days—before they were to become effective. Competitive forces caused a unanimous rollback much before the Oct. 1 effective date when some big customers of the steel companies protested, and some of the steel companies offered to continue the old prices.

The external circumstances might have been different then. It was only four months after a price increase on the same products, and there was uncertainty over the possibility of a strike in the auto industry in mid-September. Reluctantly, steel executives withdrew that price change, but continued to protest the industry's need for higher prices to improve profitability and facilitate its huge investment requirements.

At the time, several steel men said higher prices were inevitable soon and that, when they were instituted, there would not be a lead time as long as 45 days.

Now, the auto industry's labor negotiations have been settled, their inventories of steel are said to be back down to more normal levels, and they are gearing up for what is hoped will be a good spring selling season after a temporary dip in recent weeks.

Support for the view that the sheet sector of the steel business promises to strengthen came in a recent survey by Iron Age magazine, a steel trade publication. It predicted that the industry's overall shipments would rise from 7 million tons in December to 8 million tons in January, with the increase caused largely by higher demand from the auto companies.

Although corporate profits this year have shown improvement on a broad basis, the steel industry did not participate in the upturn. According to a Citibank compilation, the overall earnings of 958 American manufacturers were up about 32 percent in the first nine months of 1976 as compared with the similar period last year. However, the aggregate profits of the 13 largest steel producers showed an actual decline of 18 percent this year in a study by one of the major companies.

That study also reported that steel sales this year rose by 9 percent, implying a cost squeeze that caused the reduced earnings. It said that the industry, overall, had earned only 3.6 percent on each sales dollar.

Ironically, the company that led the latest round of steel price increases (National Steel) was the strongest gainer in sales and profits this year, running counter to the industry trend. However, it should be noted that in the full year of 1975, National Steel was one of the weakest performers in financial results, when its net income was down by 67 percent from 1974, as its sales declined by 18 percent.

The interesting questions now on the latest steel price rise are these: Will they hold? Will the council on Wage and Price Stability again find, as it did on June 11, that cost increases have outpaced price increases in the steel industry in the period since 1972? What will be the political fallout, if any, from steel's price increase on the virtual eve of a new Democratic Administration in Washington?

The company indicated that the new price for body stock would be 58.8 cents a pound, which would amount to an increase of 11.2 percent. The rise of 3.5 cents a pound for general purpose stock, which is now quoted in a range of 50 to 60 cents a pound, would amount to an increase of 5.8 to 7 percent, while the 1.5 percent rise in coated can stock, which is priced at 55 to 65 cents a pound, would result in an increase range of 2.3 to 2.7 percent.

Alcoa said that the last time these prices were raised was in December, 1974. It traced yesterday's action to "higher costs." but did not elaborate.

A spokesman for the Council on Wage and Price Stability said it would have no comment on the Alcoa move at this time, but it was recalled that in late September that Government agency felt that Alcoa, Reynolds and GKaiser were bordering on anticompetitive power when they could raise prices during a recession.

However, the council did not go so far *as to state that there was any wrong*doing by the three companies, who together control roughly 70 percent of the domestic industry.

Already Raised Twice in Year

Alcoa pointed out that prices of uncoated beer and carbonated beverage end and tab stock would remain unchanged. Prices on those products have already been raised twice this year. Last Jan. 5 Alcoa announced that it was raising by about 6 percent its prices for the rigid aluminum container stock that goes into end stock, effective Feb. 1.

This followed a move by Reynolds, which raised prices for aluminum can body stock that goes into beer and soft drink containers by "about 4 cents a pound." The Alcoa pricing rise amounted to 3 to 3.5 cents a pound, according to industry sources.

Alcoa next raised its prices for end stock by an additional 3 cents a pound and tab stock by 3.5 cents a pound, or a total price adjustment of about 5 percent, on shipments as of Aug. 2.

VW Board Backs Construction Of Pennsylvania Stamping Plant

Volkswagen's supervisory board announced yesterday that it had approved construction of a new stamping plant to be built near the New Stanton, Pa., assembly plant it purchased earlier this year.

A company spokesman said it hoped to have the new stamping plant in operation early in 1978 at the same time assembly of Volkswagen Rabbit cars starts at the assembly plant. The stamping plant will produce sheet metal components for the auto assembly operation.

Earlier this month there were reports in New Stanton that an additional 2,000 jobs would be created if VW built a stamping plant in the area.

This report was not confirmed by Volkswagenwerk A.G. in Wolfsburg, West Germany. A spokesman there said the stamping plant itself would cost "well under" $100 million. The specific site for the plant has not yet been selected, he added.

Digital Equipment Plans New Facility

Digital Equipment Corporation of Maynard, Mass., has jointly announced with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and officials of Hudson, Mass., plans to build a facility on a Hudson site that will ultimately provide some 500 new jobs.

The minicomputer manufacturer, expanding elsewhere in New England and the United States, agreed to the Hudson site for the building after six months of negotiations with the state, which has agreed to construct a two-mile road into the property. The road will cost $2 million with the Federal Government paying $1.4 million and the state the remaining $600,000. Hudson voters have authorized borrowing $335,000 for local road work.

UV Industries Sells Coal

UV Industries Inc., through its subsidiary, the United States Fuel Company, said it had entered a contract with the Nevada Power Company for the sale of between 6.3 million and 8.1 million tons of coal in the period from Jan. 1, 1977, through Dec. 31, 1994. The agreement, rescinding a prior agreement, represents total revenues of about $200 million. UV Industries added that the coal involved is a low sulfur content compliance coal that meets all current Federal and state environmental standards.

Unit Train Contract

Unit Train Coal Sales Inc., a subsidiary of McDowell Enterprises Inc., announced it had received a coal supply contract, valued at $10 million, for calendar 1977 from the Georgia Power Company, a subsidiary of the Southern Company. The contract provides for five unit trains a month consisting of 30,000 to 35,000 tons of coal each. The coal will be shipped from Unit Train's London Ky., plant.

British National Oil Agrees on Venture

The British National Oil Corporation, which is Government-owned, announced it has reached agreement on the basic terms for participation in the Heather field with members of the Union North Sea Group. The field itself is being developed by the Union Oil Company of California, the Skelly Oil Company and the Tenneco Oil Company, each of which holds a 31.25 percent interest, and Norwegian Oil, which holds the remaining 6.25 percent share.

Under the agreement British National Oil will have an option to purchase at market prices up to 51 percent of oil production from the North Sea field in Block 2-5 effective in 1980 with a nine-month notice period. According to the British Energy Department, the agreement fully satisfies the Government's policy to achieve majority participation in the block.

G.M. Unit Plans Addition

The General Motors Corporation said that its Detroit Diesel Allison division plans an addition of 800,000 square feet to its suburban Romulus facility in two expansion projects that will eventually create 300 new jobs. The division supplies diesel engines and transmissions for trucks and other transportation uses. One project calls for an addition to the parts distribution center. The second involves a 230,000-square-foot addition to the engineering test facility.

Quebec Smelters Reopen

The Aluminum Company of Canada Ltd. announced the first production from its Quebec smelters, which had been closed by a strike of employees last June 3. A new 30-month agreement was signed by the company and the union members on Nov. 14. According to the company, the first pouring of aluminum since the strike settlement occurred over the weekend at the largest smelter, the Arvida Works in Jonquire.

U.S. Steel to Study Impact of Plant

The United States Steel Corporation announced it had decided to make an environmental impact study on a possible new fully integrated steel plant on a 4,000-acre site it owns near Conneaut, Ohio, on Lake Erie.

The site is one-third in Ohio and two-thirds in Pennsylvania. The company, which earlier had estimated the cost of such a mill at $3 billion, said it had not yet decided to proceed with construction.

It said that discussions had been held with officials in Ohio and Pennsylvania and that additional meetings with other appropriate groups would be held in the future.

Outlook for '77: Another Winner

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

The recovery may not know where it's at, but the advertising business, enjoying a record year, expects 1977 to be another winner.

That message came across loud and clear from agency people and media representatives yesterday at the fourth annual conference on "the outlook for the media" sponsored by Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, the brokerage firm, at the McGraw-Hill auditorium.

Carl Spielvogel, vice chairman of the Interpublic Group of Companies, said that among agency executives he has spoken to all expect next year to be "a strong year."

He had already said that he expected the large agencies to gain disproportionately because multinational clients are looking for full service as pressures mount "to get greater efficiencies out of marketing dollars."

And, because of the high cost of television, they are "spending a lot of time and money examining alternative media."

One of the factors that will lead to a healthy 1977, he said, is that corporate profits this year are good, a condition that leads client executives to approve larger ad budgets. They also know, he said, "that advertising moves inventory" and such marketing support is necessary as personal selling continues to fade into history.

As to the growth possibilities for the big agencies such as his own, Mr. Spielvogel cited such areas as Government accounts (the military, Postal Service, Amtrak); direct response, corporate and financial services generally.

He was preceded by Robert J. Coen, vice president and advertising forecaster of McCann-Erickson, an Interpublic company. For the third time this year Mr. Coen revised his 1976 advertising spending prediction upward. This time he called for a 17.3 percent growth over last year to $33.1 billion. His June forecast was 14.6 percent and October's was 16.7. Things just keep getting better and better.

And yesterday he got more definite about next year. Last month he saw increases of 8 to 14 percent. Now he has refined that to 10.6 percent to $36.61 billion. The only medium whose growth he finds "sluggish" is direct mail.

"There is a lot of uncertainty," he concluded, "but on balance 1977 is going to be a very good year for advertising."

Dick Martwick of the Newspaper Advertising Bureau reported that 1976 has been the best year for his favorite medium since 1948 and that for the first nine months ad revenues had increased 22 percent. The fourth quarter increase can't be expected to be as good, he said, since the same period last year was so strong.

Another growth prediction came from Harvey Spiegel of the Television Bureau of Advertising, who also said that he thought that 1977 network pricing would only increase about 10 percent and spot about 13 percent.

His other good news was that he didn't see any great demand for adding an additional minute of commercial to each prime-time hour, nor did he see any rush to splitting the standard 30-second spot into smaller units.

Edward Winslow of the Magazine Publishers Association, whose industry is reaching historic advertising revenue highs, predicted that the good times would continue. He said he had already talked to a number of the members who publish monthlies and therefore have a good fix on the first quarter already. "They're optimistic," he said, "very bullish."

So are they all.

Celebrity Spots Assailed

The use of well-known personalities in TV commercials has come under attack as a "creative copout" in the current issue of Checkout, a newsletter published by Marsteller Inc.

It suggests that agencies are using the maxim, "If you have nothing important to say, get someone important to say it."

Checkout does agree that a movie or sports star may draw attention to a 30-second spot but asks, "Is the attention going to the personality or the selling message?"

"To be blunt," it notes, "celebrity commercials seem to have become a pat formula for some advertisers and agencies. Working on a new campaign, their first instinct is to reach for talent rosters. They develop lists of potential presenters before they develop strategies. The big decision turns on the merits of this or that personality."

Magazine Ad Revenues Up

October was another winner for the magazine industry. Advertising revenues increase 35 percent over October, 1975, while advertising pages increased 22 percent.

The totals were $182.4 million and 9,859 pages, the Publishers Information Bureau reports.

Now It's Harris Creative

With the departure of Alice Westbrook to become a creative director of Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago, Westbrook/Harris former executive vice president in that city, has changed its name to the Harris Creative Group. Robert N. Harris, fomer executive vice president of North Advertising, is president.

Manson Leaving Warner

Arthur Manson, who became vice president-worldwide advertising and publicity of Warner Bros. last January, is leaving the company at the end of the year because of "differences concerning the administration" of his department.

Everyman's Bloody Mary

The L. Rose division of Cadbury Schweppes U.S.A., which already sells lime juice and grenadine, is attempting to extend its sphere of influence. Its new entry is Rose's Bloody Mary Mixer in 24-ounce bottles that is going on sale on the West Coast. Ted Bates & Company is the agency.

Since there are those who like their bloodies very spicy and others who prefer them not so spicy, Rose has formulated a product "that caters to the broadest taste range, giving it universal appeal."

Italian-Americans Get a 2d Magazine

Last month I-AM, the first national magazine for Italian-Americans, made its debut. Now the charter issue of Italian-American Identity, with a January cover date, is in the mails.

This second entry into this particular ethnic market is being published by Identity Enterprises for the Italian-American at 420 Madison Avenue. Raffaele Donato, president and editor, said that his target audience was third-generation Italian-Americans. His first press run was 100,000. There are 46,000 subscribers attracted by direct mail, lists for which were mainly distilled from subscription lists of other magazines.

Advertising rates are $1,300 for a black and white page and $1,850 for four-color.

The intent of the publication, Mr. Donato said, is to bring out the best of the Italian-American experience in this country and to attract the best Italian-American writers.

Raymond Smyth, President, Wedgwood Inc.

Our product:
TELECOM private phone systems use the most advanced equipment available. Over 90% made by Nippon Electric Co., Ltd., founded 75 years ago by Western Electric, and serving 95 countries around the world. So you know it's totally reliable, long-lasting and headache-free.

Our performance:
When TELECOM installs it, TELECOM stands behind it. With maintenance agreements, service contracts, 4-hour emergency service. And a remarkable guarantee backed by TELECOM and Nippon.

Our price:
Investing in your own private phone system means depreciable assets and fixed costs. And doing it all with today's dollars. Plus you get something no one else can give: TELECOM'S unique new financing plan. It's backed by Equico Lessors, a subsidiary of the Equitable Life Assurance Co. It's hard to describe but invaluable to have.

It all makes TELECOM New York's fastest growing interconnect company serving small needs and large (from a 4-phone system to a satellite hook-up). And serving them darn well. Just ask Wedgwood, or ask Botany '500'®, El San Juan Hotel or Nathan's Famous Inc. Or better yet, ask us. Call (212) 392-7700.

Wheat Futures Off By Nearly 6 Cents; Soybeans Irregular

CHICAGO, Nov. 29 (AP)—Wheat futures declined nearly 6 cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade Monday.

Soybeans had been some 11 cents a bushel lower early but short covering and a flurry of small, new buying in the closing minutes turned prices uneven. Oats and corn closed 2 to 3½ cents a bushel lower. Soybean meal lost about $2 a ton and soy oil prices were one-third cent a pound lower. Iced broilers closed steady to nearly ¾ cent a pound lower in rather modest trade.

Several factors motivated the early selling in the wheat pit and the strong lower tone affected other pits later. Australia devalued its dollar by 17.5 per cent and Canada's dollar fell under the United States dollar over the weekend for the first time in many months. Canada and Australia compete for world wheat exports with the United States. Another factor in the selling was that world wheat production in 1976 set a record at 409.5 million tons. Last year world wheat production was 352 million tons and the previous record was 371 million tons in 1973.

There was some fair wheat and soybean support early but when the demand had run its course sellers took over. Only in the closing minutes when liquidation of short positions was noted did soybeans strengthen. Wheat prices never improved.

Corn trade was very active in the opening few minutes on expectations of some foreign sales of feed grains but the support waned and prices eased as oats followed. Meal and oil were under similiar strain through most of the session.

At the close, wheat was 5½ to 5¾ cents a bushel lower, December 2.51¾; corn was 2¾ to 3½ lower, December 2.39; oats were ¾ to 2½ lower, December 1.50¼ and soybeans were 1½ lower to 2½ higher, January 6.71.

U.S. and Jordan in Wheat Deal

AMMAN, Jordan, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—The United States and Jordan signed an agreement today to supply Jordan with 50,000 tons of wheat valued at $5.5 million. Under the agreement, the United States will finance purchases of wheat with a 20-year loan.

Commodity Price Index of 198.2 Unchanged From Week-Ago Level

Last week the commodity spot market price index of foodstuffs and industrial materials stood at 198.2, unchanged from the previous week.

The index compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics was 190.8 on Nov. 25, 1975.

The following table gives the index and its components using 1967=100 as a base:

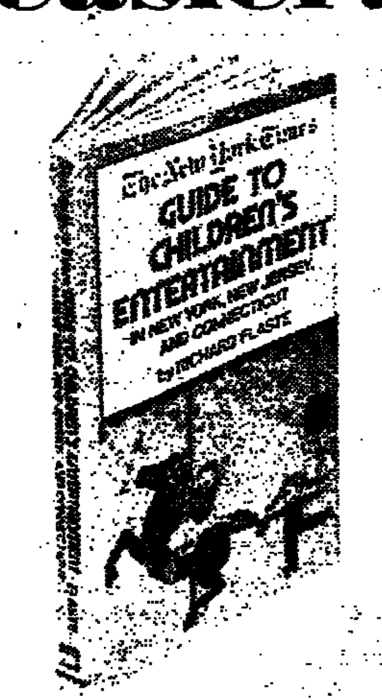
If there are children at your house, here's a way to make life easier:



Order home delivery of The New York Times and get this new book free!

Get Times delivery at a bargain price, too!

When you have The Times delivered, life is just naturally easier. You catch up with the world at your own pace. You don't have to get out of the house before all the newsstand copies are sold. You never have to worry about the weather.

If you order Times delivery right now, and you're a new subscriber, you'll get 13 weeks of seven-day service for just $2.50 a week.

And when you order, you'll get a free copy of Richard Flaste's new Guide to Children's Entertainment.

This is no ordinary guidebook. It covers entertainment possibilities from Niagara Falls to Cape May, from Camden to Mystic Seaport. It tells you about more than 100 State Parks in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It tells you how to get there, how much it costs, and it gives you a good idea whether your kids will like it or not because Flaste gives you his own impressions of many of the zoos and parks, the museums and restaurants and other places he writes about. Better still, he tells you what kids thought of them. It takes the guesswork out of children's theatre with the help of Ellen Rodman, a well known expert on the subject.

The guide tells you about things you'll enjoy doing yourself. Things like sitting in the cockpit of Howard Hughes's personal plane, watching a cow being milked, visiting a toy-maker's workshop. It tells you where you can take a boat ride on an underground stream, or go soaring in a glider. It directs you to no less than nine planetariums, tells you where you can see indoor auto racing or take a ride on a trolley car. It describes a walk through a swamp, a tour of a bakery, a visit to a doll hospital. It tells you about a nut museum, a butterfly farm and an old-fashioned ice cream parlor you can visit after you've taken a tour of police headquarters.

The fun begins when you order home delivery of The New York Times at the special introductory bargain price for new subscribers: Just $2.50 a week for 13 weeks of seven-day service. The book is free if you use this coupon to place your order:

Albany Leaders Hope to Cut Welfare Costs

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Nov. 29—The Republican and Democratic leaders of the New York State Senate agreed today that cutting welfare and Medicaid costs would have top priority during the 1977 session of the Legislature, but they disagreed on approaches.

Senator Warren M. Anderson, Republican of Binghamton, the majority leader, said the Senate Republicans, who control that house, would pass a bill soon after the session convened cutting money and other allowances to welfare recipients by 10 percent.

"It's a simplistic answer," retorted Senator Manfred Ohrenstein, Democrat of Manhattan, the minority leader, "and illusory in the sense that it will not save any real money."

The bill passed the Senate this year, but died in the Democratic-controlled Assembly.

Highest in the Country

"Even with a modest reduction of 10 percent," said Senator William T. Smith, Republican of Big Flats and chairman of the Senate Social Services Committee, "New York's payment would still rank as the highest in the country." He said the average state monthly grant in the category of aid to families with dependent children was now $337.

Senator Ohrenstein noted the prospect of "some help" on welfare costs, especially to local governments, from President-elect Jimmy Carter's incoming Administration.

In the meantime, he said, the Senate Democrats will support Governor Carey's "continued beefing up" of administrative reforms within the welfare and Medicaid bureaucracies. He said the Democrats would also press for state management of so-called Medicaid mills, legislation the Senate Republicans killed this year.

In general, the Republicans want to trim Medicaid and welfare expenditures by reducing aid to recipients while the Democrats look for an answer in cutbacks in dollars paid to physicians, hospitals, nursing homes and other providers.

Any legislative recommendations on taxes, Senator Ohrenstein said, should await Governor Carey's proposed 1977-78 budget, which the Governor will send to the Legislature on Jan. 18.

The leaders indicated clearly that they preferred a standby role for the State Legislature in the problem posed by a court decision that invalidated a moratorium on the payment of more than $1 billion in New York City short-term obligations.

"The solution should come from New York City," Senator Anderson said, "the state has no resources to commit."

PENSION FUNDS SHUN BUYING MORE BONDS

were multiple meetings involving officials of the city and the M.A.C., pension fund representatives, officials of the city's major banks, and Arthur Richenthal, the attorney for the Flushing National Bank, which won the Court of Appeals decision.

In an interview later, Mr. Bigel noted that merely to enable the pension funds to meet their present commitments to buy bonds through June 1978—by which time $3.8 billion of the funds' total assets of $10.7 billion will be invested in city and M.A.C. bonds—they had already needed a new Federal law. That law exempted the funds from a prohibition against investing more than 10 percent of their assets in their employer's debts.

"I'm in a series of constant meetings," said Mr. Bigel.

"I don't see any possibility" of further investments, he said, "although we are constantly reviewing" to see if there is "anything more the systems can do."

Even as he was rejecting one element of the city's plan, Mr. Bigel gave a tentative endorsement to the other part of it—a proposed postponement of payments of principal on the $1.3 billion in M.A.C. bonds already owned by the city's banks and pension funds.

"The 'M.A.C. stretch' is different, that has been under discussion since the spring of 1976," said Mr. Bigel. He noted that the funds from the postponement—the city would gain $175 million annually by the 'stretch'—had been earmarked originally to help close the city's budget gap, rather than to help pay off the holders of short-term notes.

Agreement in Principle

"I need a redefinition of what the money is going to be used for," he said. "In principle, we have agreed to the 'stretch.'"

After the morning meeting, Mr. Bigel, the Mayor, Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin, Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the M.A.C., and George D. Gould, a member of the M.A.C. board, had lunch in the Mayor's office with Mr. Richenthal, who filed the suit that led to the invalidation of the moratorium.

"He's getting a little schooling in city finances and he's giving us some schooling in constitutional law," said Mayor Beame of Mr. Richenthal, who is trying to work with city and state officials to come up with a plan by Dec. 15 to pay off the holders of short-term notes.

Mr. Richenthal said that he was still asking the city to pay off the note holders entirely in cash.

"That is what I'm requesting," he said. However, at the same time he seemed to leave the door open for a repayment plan that would combine cash with some kind of city or M.A.C. security.

"I'm not in a position to determine the formula" for repayment, Mr. Richenthal added.

A statement by Mr. Goldin that the Appeals Court decision required complete repayment of the note holders in cash—which Mr. Rohatyn and others consider impossible unless the city can get further Federal assistance—continued to upset the M.A.C. chairman yesterday.

"I still think it's deplorable," Mr. Rohatyn said of the Comptroller's statement. He added:

"Regardless of our desire to do so, we are not in a position to print money."

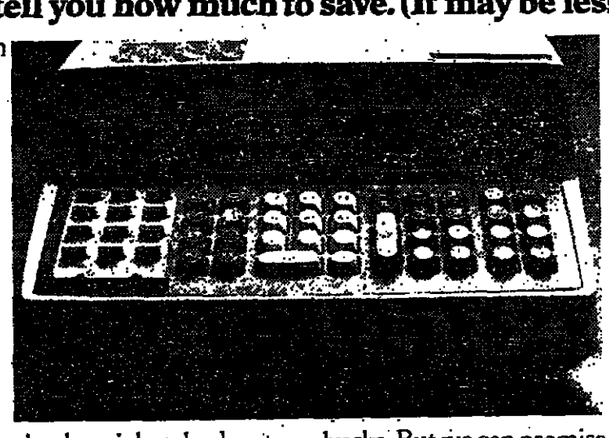
We can show you how to make a million bucks in 20 seconds.

Just tell this machine how much you want at retirement. In seconds, it'll tell you how much to save. (It may be less than you think.)

Almost every bank in the metropolitan area is now offering Individual Retirement Accounts and Keogh Plans.

But The Manhattan Savings Bank owns the remarkable little machine on the right.



Thanks to this machine, we can answer questions about I.R.A. and Keogh accounts in a matter of seconds that some banks might take days to figure out.

For example, tell us how much you want at retirement, and we'll tell you to the penny how much you'll have to save each month. Or, tell us how much you can save each month, and we'll tell you exactly how much you'll have at retirement. Or, tell us how much you want to withdraw each quarter after retirement, and we'll project for you how long your nest egg will last.

(Because this machine factors in the interest your money will earn through years of daily compounding, you may be surprised by how little you actually have to deposit to make yourself a bundle.)

But even more importantly, this machine makes it possible for our retirement specialists to sit down with you and study your particular situation in great depth. And design a retirement plan tailor-made to fit your individual needs.

And that can make you feel like a million right now.

DRAMA IN BROOKLYN: Daryl Brown lies in the lobby of his apartment house at 215 Sterling Street, comforted by friends and neighbors. He was stabbed in the chest during an altercation with a girl at a nearby store and managed to stagger to his home before collapsing. He was taken to Kings County Hospital, where he is reported to be in "very serious condition."

Issue and Debate

Will Carter Victory Bring Help for Housing Construction

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

Jimmy Carter's victory in the Presidential election appears to promise a sharp increase in Government help for housing construction.

Mr. Carter has indicated that he will seek to increase Federal efforts to promote new housing for poor and middle-income families, not only to meet their housing needs but also to provide jobs in the depressed construction industry.

Numerous local officials, civic and antipoverty leaders, builders and labor spokesmen are certain to press him to do this swiftly and on a large scale. They hold that the Nixon and Ford Administrations were remiss in housing and that there is much catching up to do.

But housing and urban-affairs specialists, in and out of Government, argue that a sharp, swift increase in federally aided housing construction could be destructive—to the economy generally and to the troubled cities that the increase would be intended to help.

They say that there are more preferred ways to deal with the problems of substandard housing and excessive rent burdens experienced by millions of Americans.

The Background

Since the Depression of the 1930's, the Federal Government has enacted a wide array of housing and renewal programs in an effort to provide improved housing for urban and rural slum-dwellers. These have included public housing built by local authorities and subsidy programs to help private builders lower their costs.

Altogether these programs have produced three million apartments and single-family houses for poor and moderate-income families—a seemingly substantial amount, yet far less than what is needed to achieve the official goal of a "decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family."

In 1973, with federally subsidized housing being built at a record pace—because of legislation enacted during President Lyndon B. Johnson's Administration — President Richard M. Nixon severely curtailed this output. The programs involved, he held, were rife with inefficiency and scandal.

A Democratic-controlled Congress subsequently passed, and President Ford approved, a new system of tenant rent supplements that today are the dominant form of Federal housing subsidy.

In his campaign, Mr. Carter branded the rent-supplement system ineffective in spurring all the new construction needed, and he called for a resurgence of "direct Federal subsidies and low-interest loans to encourage the construction of low- and middle-income housing."

For Increased Aid

Mr. Carter argued that "whatever the Nixon and Ford Administrations may think, 'public housing' and 'subsidized housing' are not dirty words—we know traditional public housing can work when directed by professional local housing authorities."

Mr. Carter's view may well have been shaped by his personal experience with low-rent public housing. When he left the Navy in 1953 and returned to his hometown of Plains, Ga., to take over the peanut business of his recently deceased father, Mr. Carter, his wife and their young sons lived for a period in a new public housing project in Plains.

The President-elect has also cited the very high unemployment among construction workers—more than 15 percent nationally, about twice as high as the general unemployment rate.

Much of this, labor leaders and others argue, stems from an insufficient recovery by the housing industry, which last year started construction of 1.2 million single-family houses and apartments. This was a 50 percent drop from the last peak year in 1972.

In 1976, the industry expects, about 1.5 million units will have been started. But John C. Hart, president of the National Association of Home Builders, says that a more desirable number is 1.8 million starts a year, including several hundred thousand homes for lower-income families now unable to afford new housing.

The added 300,000, he suggests, could be spurred by such Presidential steps as loosening restrictions on Federal mortgage subsidies and insurance to foster home ownership by people earning $11,000 to $20,000 a year. These people are now generally priced out of the market for new single-family houses, Mr. Hart says.

In New York City, where a mere 3,800 apartments and single-family homes were authorized for construction last year—fewer than in the worst year of the Depression—and where losses to the housing stock from decay, fires and abandonment far outpace construction and rehabilitation, a vast resurgence of federally subsidized construction is vital, according to local civic, antipoverty and industry spokesmen.

"We need a program of 20,000 new units within two years," says Maurice Paprin, president of the Associated Builders and Owners of Greater New York. He suggest reinstatement of a mortgage-subsidy program for apartment construction that President Nixon froze.

Overall in the United States, at least seven million households, out of a total of 70 million, live in "physically inadequate" housing and nearly one million more live in seriously overcrowded conditions, according to a joint study by Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Only a sharply altered and stepped-up program of Federal construction subsidies and loans will overcome these deficiencies, critics of present Federal policies say.

Against Increased Aid

Opponents of such a change hold that it is not needed. They assert that the housing industry is already in a healthy recovery and that a faster pace would spark further inflation.

Ford Administration officials note that the number of apartments and single-family homes started in September and October represents an annual rate of 1.8 million. They maintain that this reflects a long-term improvement and vindicates the current policy of rent subsidies combined with relatively limited and careful "dosages" of construction aid—such as $5 billion in financing gradually released in a mortgage-purchase program to spur apartment construction at reduced borrowing costs.

Others argue that a surge to build new subsidized housing, as took place under the programs enacted in the Johnson period, inevitably leads to much shoddy construction, to "rip-offs" by developers and investors seeking tax shelters, and to numerous projects in areas least needing them.

George Sternlieb, a Rutgers University specialist in urban policy, argues in fact that the Johnson-era housing legislation might have helped draw residents out of troubled older cities of the Northeast, by providing an unduly large amount of new, moderate-cost homes in other areas of the country. This could have contributed to the population and economic declines of the older cities, he says.

"If we have a dupication of he very substantial amounts of new housing with deep subsidy that we had several years ago, it will lead to an increased outmigration from central cities," he predicts.

Still other opponents of sharply stepped-up construction aid hold that, until the Nixon freeze on programs in 1973, the Federal Government had relied too heavily on new construction to meet the housing needs of the poor, to the detriment of the American taxpayer and the subsidized families themselves.

Comparative Costs Cited

Henry Aaron, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, says that new construction is unusually more expensive than the rehabilitation of declining buildings often found in an area. Moreover, he and others assert, by linking subsidies to specific housing built with Government aid—a key feature of construction-oriented programs—the Government promotes construction of subsidized "ghettos" and restricts the "mobility" of aided families.

A far better way to deal with substandard housing and excessive rent burdens, they feel, is to provide needy families with rent subsidies or "housing allowances," to enable them to seek improved quarters in the general housing market.

Specialists on both sides of the issue emphasize that the disagreement is not really a matter of those who favor an exclusively "demand-oriented" Federal approach (subsidizing rents) as against those who favor an exclusively "supply-oriented" policy (promoting new construction).

They say, rather, that both approaches are needed, and that the real issue is how much of each should be stressed to achieve a "proper mix" in Federal housing policy.

The Outlook

While Mr. Carter has yet to present detailed proposals for his promised "revitalization" of the housing industry, the chances are that his plans will involve some middle ground—that they will seek more federally-stimulated new construction than the Ford Administration did, but less than some adherents of the expanded-construction approach wish.

This would reflect a growing body of opinion, including that of many Congressional Democrats, that a sound national policy must contain a blending of both construction and rent-paying aid to deal with widely varying local housing conditions.

Mother Is Stabbed In Court Anteroom; Husband Arrested

A 31-year-old woman was critically wounded in an alleged knife attack by her husband yesterday afternoon in an anteroom of Family Court in Manhattan, where they and an 8-year-old son had gone for a hearing on abuse charges against the father.

The police said the victim, Nancy Smith of 142 West 130th Street, had been stabbed four or five times in the neck and chest. The attack occurred at about 4:30 P.M. in a fifth-floor waiting room of the Family Court Building at 60 Lafayette Street in lower Manhattan.

The couple's son, Antonio, was said to have been in court, talking to a judge, when court officers heard screams from the anteroom, rushed in and allegedly saw Leroy Smith, 35, standing over and attacking his wife with a knife.

A struggle ensued as Mr. Smith attempted to continue the attack on his wife, according to the police, but the court officers managed to subdue and disarm him. Mrs. Smith was taken to Beekman-Downtown Hospital, where her condition later was listed as critical.

Mr. Smith was taken to the Fifth Precinct police station at 19 Elizabeth Street, where detectives said he would be charged with attempted murder and possession of a weapon. They said a knife with a hinged blade had been used in the attack, which was said to have occurred when the couple were alone in the anteroom.

Last month the Economic Development Council of New York City, a private group, recommended a strengthening of security "in the face of potentially explosive situations" in the city's Family Courts.

"It would be a grave mistake to underestimate the potential for violence in Family Court," the council noted in a study. It added: "One day some months ago, five separate incidents occurred in Manhattan Family Court, which caused people to be sent to Bellevue. This included one suicide attempt in the courtroom."

The 11-story Family Court Building, which opened earlier this year, houses more than a dozen courtrooms on the fifth to 11th floors in addition to a Probation Department and other offices. The study group noted that the building had a maze of corridors to be patrolled, besides numerous offices.

The number of security guards assigned to patrol in the $29-million, 1,200-room building could not be determined last night.

Boat in Yard Kills Jersey Girl, 4

BRICK TOWNSHIP, N. J., Nov. 29 (AP) —A 4-year-old girl died yesterday after a fiberglass boat that had been propped against a tree fell on her while she was playing. The police said that the girl, Tara Dalby of Brick Township, died during surgery at Point Pleasant Hospital. Preliminary findings indicated "massive head injuries" as the cause of death, the authorities said. The girl and her 6-year-old brother had been playing outside the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, where they had gone with their father for a visit.

Now that it's become almost chic to admit addiction to soap operas—people like Lillian Carter, the President-elect's mother, and Supreme Court Associate Justice Thurgood Marshall are "soap" fans—it perhaps comes as no surprise that UCLA Medical Center has been getting "several dozen" calls daily inquiring about Emily McLaughlan. Miss McLaughlan is usually on the medical dispensing end of things, in her role as head nurse Jesse Brewer in television's "General Hospital." But on Nov. 18 the actress, who has been with the show for 13 years, was hospitalized with an undisclosed ailment, and later she was transferred to UCLA Medical Center. A spokesman there said she was in the intensive care unit, suffering from internal bleeding.

In the latest development in his continuing struggle with French tax officials, an arrest warrant was issued yesterday for Charles Aznavour, the internationally known, raspy-voiced singer. Mr. Aznavour failed to show up last Friday for a hearing on his alleged involvement in a tax fraud case, and court officials said he had not offered a satisfactory explanation for his absence. The warrant was issued by Judge Freddy Faucier, in the criminal court at Versailles, where Mr. Aznavour maintains a home. He has denied avoiding French taxes, claiming his primary residence is now in Switzerland. Mr. Aznavour was charged last April with illegally channeling earnings to Switzerland.

Down in Raymondville, Tex., Sheriff Oscar Correa was called to the rescue of a party of tenderfeet who had become stuck in the mud in two four-wheel drive vehicles. The party, camping out over the weekend, was headed by Vice President Rockefeller, who had along two of his sons and some friends. Sheriff Correa reported that he had asked Mr. Rockefeller how he had happened to get stuck and that the Vice President had explained that he was out checking his buffalo. Twenty-two of the critters roam over Mr. Rockefeller's 6,000-acre ranch north of Raymondville in South Texas. Commenting on the number of Secret Service men accompanying the Rockefeller party, Sheriff Correa said, "There was one under every mesquite tree."

It was one of those believe-it-or-not occurrences. At Bidford on Avon, England, Graham Flemons was competing Sunday as a member of the British Parachute Association's free-fall exhibition team. The 25-year-old Mr. Flemons' parachute failed to open, his reserve 'chute became tangled and he plunged more than a mile into a plowed field. Yesterday he was being treated for internal injuries and a broken leg suffered in the 7,000-foot fall.

Hills to Shut Down Eight Supermarkets In New York Region

Special to The New York Times

BRENTWOOD, L.I., Nov. 29—Hills Supermarkets Incorporated announced today that it would close eight "unprofitable" stores next Saturday, five of them in Suffolk County and one in Nassau.

A spokesman for the supermarket chain, which will be left with 43 stores in the New York metropolitan region after the closings, said he was not sure of the number of employees who would be put out of work. Press reports, however, put the figure at 400, with about 150 to be transferred to other stores, according to officials at Pueblo International, the chain's parent company.

Suffolk County's supermarkets and shopping centers have been experiencing hard times in recent years following the failure of population increase predictions to keep up with retail expansion in the county. The closing of supermarkets causes particular difficulties in shopping centers, since the small shops at the centers often depend on the daily traffic in supermarket food customers for the bulk of their trade.

The Hills stores to be closed are in Northport, Commack, West Babylon, Hauppauge, East Setauket, Plainedge, the Bronx, and Yonkers, according to the spokesman.

The closings announced today bring to 29 the number of Hills branches shut down over the last two years, 16 of them on Long Island. Of the remaining stores in the chain, 35 are on the Island.

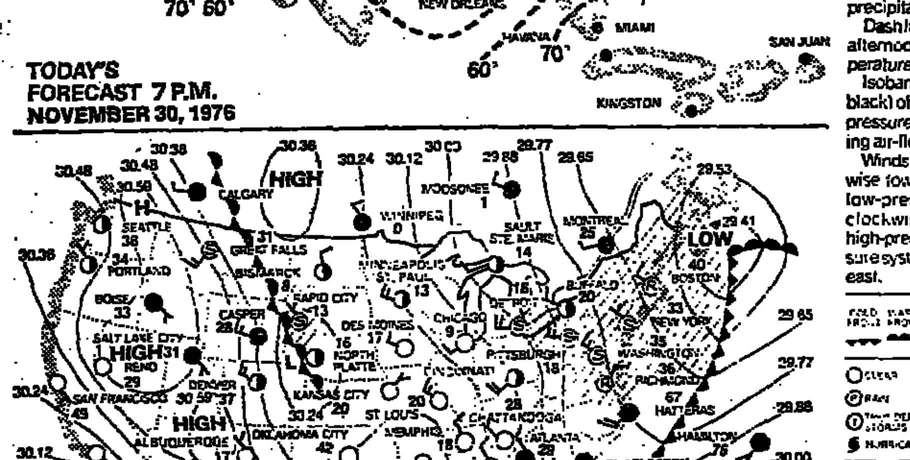
TODAY'S FORECAST 7 P.M. NOVEMBER 30, 1976



YESTERDAY 1 P.M. NOVEMBER 29, 1976

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

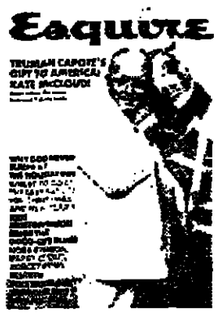
You'll love him in December even more than you did in May.



AT LAST, TRUMAN CAPOTE UNWRAPS KATE McCLOUD!

Now, the 4th exclusive installment of Truman Capote's controversial novel-in-progress, Answered Prayers. May's bestselling "Unspoiled Monsters" was a tantalizing prelude to the enigmatic Kate McCloud. December's unabashed chapter is a resounding rhapsody in blue. You'll finally meet the beautiful and mysterious Kate. In the flesh. And watch the pieces fall into place. You'll also hoist a few with Dorothy Parker, Tallulah Bankhead, Estelle Winwood and Monty Clift. And learn more about the crime P.B. Jones "might have" committed. It's going to be a very warm Christmas in some quarters. Don't miss it!

TV: Crosby and Knight Specials Fail Despite All Good Intentions

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

'Tis the season of specials, and CBS is especially busy this week. Among the mixed lot of offerings, tonight's "The Ted Knight Musical Comedy Variety Special Special" attempts something a little different. Tomorrow's "Bing Crosby's White Christmas Special" sticks to the traditional inclusion of the entire Crosby family. Both fail.

The Knight special, on at 8 P.M., represents another instance of throwing a very competent character actor into the role of full-fledged entertainment star. Mr. Knight, who plays the stupendously egotistical Ted Baxter on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," is pleasant and affable and modestly talented in the art of variety specials, but he doesn't make it as star.

He does use an interesting gimmick. The former Tadewurz Konopka of Terryville, Conn., Mr. Knight re-creates a trip he made last year to his hometown to accept a Man of the Year Award. Still playing Ted Baxter, he strikes up old acquaintances with typically unjustified assurance, only to run into ego-deflation and sticky sentimentality.

Somewhere in this idea there is the traditional portrait of the "ethnic" person succeeding handsomely in America. But the special is preoccupied too much of the time with distracting routines. Edward Asner, Rue McClanahan, Phil Silvers, Loretta Swit and Fred MacMurray are brought on for uninspired turns. Ethel Merman, as the local school teacher, gets to sing "No Business Like Show Business" plus, in something of a daily double score, "God Bless America."

The Crosby show, tomorrow at 9 P.M., was taped in London, although the setting is supposed to be sunny and snowless California, and it represents the singer's 41st annual Christmas presentation. Mr. Crosby is in exceptionally fine voice. Bernadette Peters is fine within the limitations imposed on her.

Isolating the key problem, however, tends to place the critic in the unenviable role of Scrooge for the holidays. It is nothing less than the Crosby family. When the children—Mary Frances, Harry and Nathaniel—were toddlers, their presence could be easily tolerated for the sake of family warmth and cute togetherness. Now that they are grown, it is quite evident that they are undeniably nice but singularly untalented young people. To keep foisting them and Kathryn Crosby, Bing's wife, on audiences year after year amounts to foolishness bordering on arrogance.

Bing, Kathryn and Nat Crosby

As a singer, Mr. Crosby happens to be a personal favorite of mine. He still can put a lyric through the marvelous gyrations of inimitable crooning. It would be a pleasure simply to have him appear and sing, supported perhaps by the best names in show business. His pride in family is certainly laudable but, strictly in terms of performance, it has

COINS

Unlike other coins, the Krugerrand contains precisely one troy ounce of pure gold.

As a result, it's easy to price. Easy to buy. And easy to sell. Which may be why the Krugerrand has become the most popular gold coin in the world.

Make a point to stop in and learn more about the South African Krugerrand.

You'll definitely be wiser for it. And maybe wealthier.

Give an ounce of pure love for Christmas.

You may have given a loved one a gift in 14-Karat, or even 18-Karat gold.

But did you ever give an ounce of pure gold?

What you see here is absolutely unique. The one coin that contains exactly one troy ounce of pure gold—mounted in a pendant to wear as exquisite jewelry.

The coin itself is a legal tender coin—the South African Krugerrand. But, unlike other coins, its value is not stated in a specific currency denomination (such as 100 dollars, or 1000 francs) but is based on the actual world ounce-price of gold. (Thus it will always be worth what an ounce of gold is worth.)

You can buy Krugerrands at banks, brokerage firms and coin dealers. And many jewelers carry a variety of mountings for this coin. (Including gifts for men, such as money clips.)

Christmas is a tradition that has endured through the ages, and gold, through the ages, has been man's enduring precious metal.

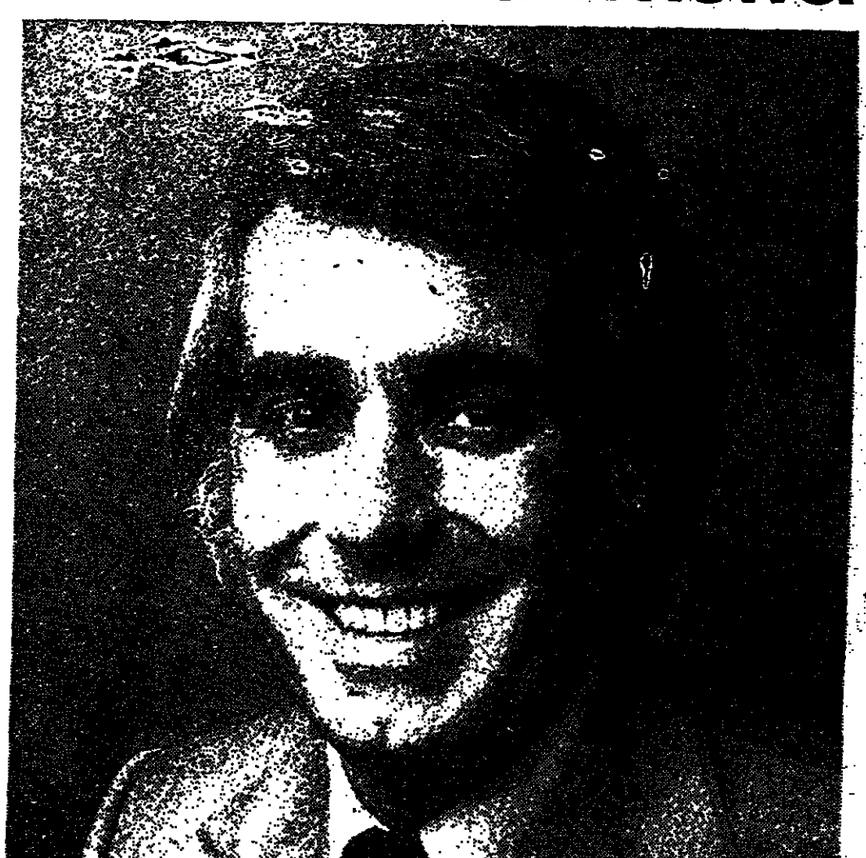
Tom Snyder. The last word in news.



Being on NewsCenter 4 from 6-7pm makes Tom the last word in news.

But for people who like their news delivered with impact and wit, he's the only word.

Though his style is bright and brash, he's not likely to let a reporter off the hook until all the facts are in, because Tom is a penetrating reporter himself. Nor is he likely to miss a chance to blunt the harsh edge of the day's events with humor.

Watch this top-notch professional newsman and you'll see the sparks fly. A lot of people are watching. Since he joined NewsCenter 4, we've become the fastest growing news show on New York Television.

In testimony before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, Mr. Smith said he had found a large demand for such photographs among his clients—virtually every news agency in the country—and had left it to the editors to decide whether the materials were authentic.

During his appearance he also claimed his Fifth Amendment privilege in refusing to say whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. However, in a letter to a special House committee during a 1940 investigation of the labor relations board, he and other board members and employees had denied party membership.

Mr. Simth, who was born in Brookline, Mass., in 1891 and graduted from Harvard in 1915, followed a curious route to his advocacy of improved conditions for labor.

He worked as a newspaper reporter in Hartford and Springfield until after his marriage in 1917 to Mario Long. He then went to work for her father, a shoe manufacturer, until he joined the Dennison Manufacturing Company in Framingham. Henry Dennison was interested in time studies and Mr. Smith conducted research on industrial relations there and then continued the work for the Russell Sage Foundation.

In 1924 he became personnel manager at Filene's Department Store in Boston and caught the eye of A. Lincoln Filene, who made him his personal assistant and sponsored him for the post of state Commissioner of Labor and Industries, to which he was appointed in 1931.

During those years he became increasingly aware and concerned about the prevailing labor conditions and began seeking remedies. He helped pass the state's minimum wage law, set up a separate department of Industrial Hygiene to monitor health and safety conditions and persuaded Massachusetts and Connecticut tobacco growers to stop using field hands under 14 years old.

He came to President Roosevelt's attention as the chief Massachusetts compliance officers for the National Recovery Act and was sent by the President as the country's official observer at the Geneva International Labor Conference in 1933.

He was named to the temporary labor relations board when it was created by President Roosevelt the next year and remained through seven increasingly stormy years in which he was denounced by business interests for his pro-labor and leftists views.

The board also came under fire from the competing American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, whose eventual merger was still years away.

In retrospect many of the objections raised against the board and its enforcement of collective bargaining seem quaint, but at the time many regarded the board as highly suspect and Mr. Smith became a lightning rod for the opposition. By 1941 he had become a political liability to President Roosevelt and was not reappointed despite the urging of Philip Murray, the C.I.O. president, who called his continued service on the board "of the utmost importance to the C.I.O."

In addition to his wife, Mr. Smith is survived by a son, Richard S. Smith; a daughter, Diana Madell; five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Funeral services will be private.

JOHN THOMAS SCHNEIDER, FORMER FEDERAL OFFICIAL

John Thomas Schneider, a lawyer and former Federal official, died last Friday at a Washington, D. C. nursing home. He was 81 years old and a resident of the capital.

A graduate of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. and Harvard Law School, Mr. Schneider joined the Army in 1917 and served in France. From 1919 to 1924, he was a personal aide to Gen. John J. Pershing.

After retirement from the Army in 1929, he practiced law in Newark, N. J. from 1930 to 1934 when he became a special assistant to the Secretary of the Interior. In 1935 he became counsel to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries and in 1943 he became associated with Standard Brands Inc. as general counsel, a post he held until 1949.

He then returned to Federal service and among the positions he held were chairmanship of the interagency committee on military-contractor relationships and the chairmanship of the personnel policy board of the Defense Department.

Mr. Schneider also taught law at the United States Military Academy from 1927 to 1930 and at the Washington College of Law of American University from 1955 to 1960, and again from 1968 until his death.

He leaves his wife, the former Sarah Thomson, a son, Charles A. and a daughter, Laura T.

DR. JULIUS A. HAIMAN

Dr. Julius A. Haiman, an ear, nose and throat specialist, died Friday at Lenox Hill Hospital. He was 84 years old and lived at 166 East 61st Street.

Dr. Haiman, a graduate of the Vanderbilt University Medical School, was adjunct professor for ear, nose and throat at Polyclinic Hospital and an associate attending physician at the Hospital for Joint Diseases during the 1920's and 1930's.

Here comes The Number One Woman. For December.

She's a bright-eyed tradition all her own. And her initials are LHJ.

LHJ stands for Ladies' Home Journal. And when it comes time for Christmas, Ladies' Home Journal talks to The Number One Woman.

The woman we have in mind goes for the very best of yesteryear and the very best of today. And she has a way of putting them together in one happy holiday frame of mind that says something warm and wonderful about the season it is and the woman she is.

To put her in a mood that's partly child, partly Santa Claus and completely hers, the December LHJ opens the door to a Christmas world.

You'll find a whole book of cookies. There's a centerpiece Santa with reindeer and sleigh. An easy-to-bake forest of Christmas trees. Old-fashioned butter-doughs that melt in your mouth. Childs-play fun-cookies to make with the kids. And many more cookie ideas for the holidays.

You'll find a treasury of gift and decoration ideas, too, for a Christmas Royale that turns the simplest things into elegant holiday items.

You'll find a Christmas story by Kaatje Hurlbut that rings with the spirit of "Other Miracles, Other Times."

And you'll discover a whole world of people, past and present. There's a human, revealing new book about Dwight D. Eisenhower. And an inspiring story by Carol Burnett. There are pages of midnight fashions on Shirley MacLaine, Raquel Welch, Ann-Margret and Liza Minnelli. There's Gene Shalit on movies, Sylvia Porter and much, much more.

All in the December LHJ.

And it all adds up to this. If you're one of our readers, The Number One Woman is you. And if you're one of our advertisers, The Number One Woman is yours.

For Christmas. And New Year's. And Always.
